78. ———— Penal Code, s. 218—Public servant.—A treasury accountant was convicted of offences under ss. 218 and 465 of the Penal Code under the following circumstances: A sum of R500, which was in the treasury and was payable to a particular person through a Civil Court, was drawn out and paid away to other persons by means of forged cheques. After the withdrawal of the R500, but before such withdrawal had been discovered, the representative of the payee applied for payment. The prisoner then, upon two occasions, wrote reports to the effect that the R500 in question then stood at the payee's credit as a revenue deposit, and that it was about to be transferred to the Civil Court. Upon the first of these reports, an order was signed by the treasury officer for the transfer of the money to the Civil Court concerned, and to effect such transfer, a cheque was prepared by the sale-mohurrir, which as originally drawn up related to the sum of R500 already mentioned. The signature of the cheque by the treasury officer was delayed for some time, and meanwhile the cheque was altered by the prisoner in such a manner as to make it relate to another deposit of R500 which had been made subsequently to the above, and to the credit of another person. The result of this was the transfer of the second payee's R500 to the Civil Court, as if it had been the first R500, and to the credit of the first payee's representative. The prisoner was convicted under s. 465 of the Penal Code in respect of the cheque, and under s. 218 in respect of the two reports above referred to. Held that the prisoner's intention in making the false reports was to stave off the discovery of the previous fraud and save himself or the actual perpetrator of that fraud from legal punishment, and that, having prepared the reports in a manner which he knew to be incorrect, he was rightly convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code. Held further that, as the prisoner, who was a public servant, made these reports and assumed to make them in due course and as a part of his duty and held them out as reports which were made by the proper officer, and as no question was put in the examination of the witnesses from the office which suggested that it was not his business to make such reports, it must be inferred that he made them because it was his business to do so, and as a public servant within the meaning of s. 218 of the Penal Code. Pending this decision, a Full Bench disposed of questions of law as to the admissibility in evidence in this suit of the judgment and record in a prior suit; in which it had been found, as a fact, that there had been at one time in existence an heir born of the parentage which the defence in this suit alleged to be that of the minor defendant. It was disputed in the present suit whether the minor defendant was the same individual whom his alleged mother, the defendant in the former suit (there being the same plaintiff in both suits), stated to be her son; also whether, if that identity were proved, the suit would be barred as res judicata. This latter question was decided in the negative by the Full Bench, which held the judgment in the former suit not to be conclusive upon the present one, but also held the record to be admissible. There was no appeal from that decision; and on an appeal from the decree of the Divisional Court, the Judicial Committee affirmed on the facts the decree made. PALAKDHARI SINGH v. ferry,—Held that there is nothing in the law of Bengal as it was before the acquisition by the British Government or in the Regulations before or after 1793 to show that any person is entitled to claim a monopoly of a right of ferry by prescription or by any other means than a grant from the Crown. To such a monopoly Part IV (ss. 26, 27, 28) of the Limitation Act of 1877 relating to the acquisition of ownership by prescription is not applicable. The franchise of a ferry is not necessarily appurtenant to land, but where a right of ferry was claimed as appurtenant to certain villages,—Held that the grant of such right by the Crown would not be destroyed by mere non-user without waiver, nor by the running of an opposition ferry. 26. ——— Jalkar—Private and public rights.—A private right of fishery in a tidal navigable river must, if it exists at all, be derived from the Crown and established by very clear evidence, as the presumption is against any such private right. Quære—Whether such right can be created at all. A mere recital in quinquennial papers that a person is the owner of jalkar rights in a zamindari permanently settled with him by Government is not sufficient to give to such person a right of fishery in a public navigable river; any right granted under such word "jalkar" would be perfectly satisfied if construed to apply exclusively to a right to fish within enclosed water, such as a jhil. PROSUNNO COOMAR SIRCAR v. RAM COOMAR PAROOEY [I. L. R., 4 Calc., 53

27. ——— Right of fishery in tidal river—Prescription.—The right of the public to fish in tidal waters in British India may be curtailed by an exclusive privilege acquired by grant or prescription by certain persons within certain limits. Such an exclusive privilege, being an infringement of the general rights of the public, could be acquired by a period of enjoyment which would suffice for the acquisition of on easement against the Crown. VIRESA v. TATAYYA . . I, L. R., 8 Mad., 467

28. ——— Right of fishery in tidal navigable river—Grant of rights by Crown—Grant, where there is no title by prescription, must be proved—Evidence as to nature and extent of grant.—The exclusive right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers may be granted by the Crown to private individuals. Such a right must ordinarily be proved either by proof of a direct grant from the Crown or by prescription. In the absence of title by grant or prescription in persons alleging themselves to be the holders of a jalkar under an ijara, the mere payment of rent by fishermen to former ijaradars does not estop such fishermen from disputing the rights of the alleged holders; but such payment for the use of the jalkar right is strong evidence of the rights of the alleged holders of the ijara, and of acquiescence in their title. In the case of a grant of a jalkar, in ascertaining what the boundaries of the jalkar are, or what rights of fishery are contained within those boundaries, whether the subject of the grant be in tidal navigable rivers or not, the Courts should be guided by the same rules of evidence as would be applicable for the purpose of determining the nature and extent of any other grant. Per PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ.—Unless the boundaries given in a grant of a jalkar clearly indicate to the contrary, a grant of a jalkar would not ordinarily include the right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers. decree by the Subordinate Judge, a notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code was served on the judgment-debtor, calling on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and an order was forthwith issued for the attachment of his property. The judgment-debtor appeared and objected that the copy of the record was not properly certified, and therefore that the whole of the execution-proceedings were bad. The Subordinate Judge ordered that the record be sent back to the Cooch Behar Court through the District Judge in order that a certificate might be given in proper form, and directed that the other points raised should be decided after the return of the papers. On appeal it was urged that the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, but the District Judge rejected the appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court. Held that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in sending the record back to the Cooch Behar Court to be properly certified, and also that he should have set aside the execution-proceedings as being altogether void, but, as that formed no portion of the grounds of appeal urged in the lower Appellate Court, the appeal should be dismissed. 5. ———————— Suits in British Court on judgments and decrees of Courts established in recognized foreign States—Territorial jurisdiction of each separate State in personal actions—Civil Procedure Code (1882), ss. 431 and 434—Right of suit.—Jurisdiction, being properly territorial and attaching, with certain restrictions, upon every person permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, does not follow a foreigner, after his withdrawal thence, living in another State. As to land within the territory, jurisdiction always exists, and may exist over moveables within it, and exists in questions of status or succession governed by domicile. But no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction, which a Court of a foreign State ought to recognize, over an absent foreigner owing no allegiance to the State so legislating. In a personal action, to which none of the above causes of jurisdiction apply, a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign State, in absentem, the latter not having submitted himself to its authority, is by international law a nullity. Not to the Courts of the State in which the cause of action has arisen, nor in cases of contract to those of the locus solutionis, should resort be had by the plaintiffs, but to the Courts of the State in which the defendant resides, the Courts of the latter State having jurisdiction in all personal actions. Ex-parte decrees for money were made in the territories of the ruling Chief of Faridkot, a State in subordinate alliance with the Government of India, against a person who had been employed by that State within its territories, but had, before suit brought, relinquished his employment, had left the State, and was then, at the time when he was sued, resident in another State of which he was the domiciled subject. Held that these decrees were a nullity by international law, and could not receive effect in a British Indian Court. Becquet v. Macarthy, 2 B. & Ad., 951, distinguished. The judgment of BLACKBURN, J., in Schilsby v. Westenholz, L. R., 6 Q. B., 155, referred to and explained. 6. ———————— Private international law—Suit in British Court on foreign judgment—Territorial jurisdiction—British subject—Domicile—Nationality—Decree of foreign Court as evidence in Court in British India—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 13.—A foreign Court has no jurisdiction over a person who is a British subject domiciled and residing in British India, who was not within the territorial jurisdiction of that Court either at the time when a suit was brought against him or previously, and who never subjected himself by any act of his, such as by appearing and defending the suit, to the jurisdiction of that Court. A decree passed by a foreign Court against such a person cannot be given effect to in a Court in British India. Even if there be in such a case any special territorial legislation giving jurisdiction to the foreign Court, such legislation cannot be recognized by a Court in British India. Nationality is determined by birth on the soil, and not by citizenship by descent. There is a distinction between a case in which a defendant puts forward a foreign judgment as a bar to a suit under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a case in which a plaintiff seeks to enforce a foreign judgment. In the former, it may fairly be supposed that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. Gurdyal Singh v. *Raja of Faridkot, I. L. R., 22 Calc., 222 : L. R., 21 I. The defendant employed a vakil to defend the suit, but, on the case coming on for hearing, the vakil stated he had no instructions, and an ex-parte decree was passed. An application by the defendant to have the decree set aside was held to be time-barred. The plaintiff now brought a suit on the judgment of the French Court to recover the amount decreed to him. Held that the suit was not maintainable for the reason that the decree had been passed against the defendant in absentem by a foreign Court, to which he had not submitted himself. Semble—Even if the foreign judgment had not been entirely invalid as against the defendant, the British Court would have had jurisdiction to disallow an item of claim allowed by the foreign Court on account of prospective damages which was unsupported by evidence. There had been no formal sanad; but on the true construction of the official correspondence, as to which the Courts below had differed, the Government first continued the possession of the ancestor for life, and afterwards conferred the inheritance, as to one moiety of the estate, upon the defendant, who was one of the sons of the original holder, and, as to the other moiety of the estate, upon the plaintiffs, who were the four brothers of the defendant, then living. The claim made by the plaintiffs, having been founded on a different title, was dismissed by the High Court. But this dismissal was accompanied by a declaration that the above grant had been made. the Superintendent of the Jail to show cause why they should not be set at liberty. In the affidavits filed in showing cause against the rule the only reason suggested for their arrest was that they were connected with loose women residing in a certain district of Bombay. It was contended for the prisoners that their arrest and imprisonment were illegal (1) inasmuch as Act III of 1864 was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature; (2) that the Act, being intended only to secure the "peace and security" of British India, was in this case improperly applied. Held (1) that Act III of 1864 was not ultra vires of the Governor-General of India in Council; (2) that it was rightly applied in the case of the foreigners in question, although their residing in Bombay may not have been likely to have affected or endangered the peace and security of British India. Per STARLING, J.—S. 3 of Act III of 1864 gives the fullest power to the Government to order any foreigner to remove himself from British India. The Government is the sole judge of what is necessary for the peace and security of British India, and, if it acted in accordance with the letter of the Act, the Court could not inquire into the sufficiency of its reasons for so acting. which it possessed previously to 1823." The accused was khot of the village of Asgoli in the Ratnagiri District. He was charged, under s. 75, cl. (c), of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), with the offence of cutting down two teak trees without obtaining the permission of Government as required by the rules framed by Government under the Forest Act. He contended that he was absolute owner of the trees under Dunlop's proclamation. He was convicted, and applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the conviction must be reversed. The land on which the trees in question were growing was the khoti khasgi land of the accused, and he was therefore entitled to the benefit of Dunlop's proclamation, by virtue of which the trees thereon became his property. Held also that Dunlop's proclamation could not be withdrawn by Government. Collector of Ratnagiri v. Vyankatrav Narayan Surve, 8 Bom., A. C., 1, followed. Per FULTON, J.—Khasgi land, of which the khot was actually in possession, was clearly within Dunlop's proclamation, and it granted the right to teak and other trees in khasgi lands held by vatandar khots. . . . . It is clear, too, that the right to trees, having once been conceded, could not be withdrawn by the proclamation of 1851, and it seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest, having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter, could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees. The Government having left the property of the convicts in the hands of the Administrator General as administrator to the estate of the convicts' father whence it was derived, in whose hands it was allowed to accumulate pending a separate litigation in respect of that estate, while it asserted its right by virtue of the confiscation to other property of the convicts the title to which was undisputed, it was held that the Government had sufficiently declared and acted upon its intention to enforce the confiscation. The Queen's proclamation of amnesty (November 1858), coming after the conviction and confiscation, had not the effect of re-vesting in the convicts the property confiscated. Held also that the property in question, being Government paper, was liable to confiscation; and lastly, that N's widow was not entitled to maintenance out of the property confiscated by the State. sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (1) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s. 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan; (2) with forgery (s. 467) in respect of the challan; and (3) with using a forged document (s. 471) in respect of the same document. The accused was convicted on all these charges. It was contended that the charge under ss. 467 and 471 were bad, as there was no evidence to support them, and even admitting the alteration of the challan such alteration did not come within the term "forgery" as used in the Penal Code, not having been made with the intention of causing any wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but with the intention of screening the offence of criminal breach of trust which had been previously committed. Held, further, that it is not necessary for the purpose of constituting the offence of forgery that the false document should be made with the intention of committing a fraud or dishonesty in the future, and that, if the intention with which a false document is made be to conceal a fraudulent act which has been previously committed, the intention cannot be other than to commit fraud, and the offence of forgery as defined in s. 463 is committed. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the sanction should be revoked. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted. 8. ——— Charge of fraud—Alteration in nature of fraud charged.—It is a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that, when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it. In a suit by the Official Assignee to recover a sum which it was alleged had been improperly and fraudulently paid away from the estate of an insolvent, the plaint as presented alleged the fraudulent concealment of the payment from the Assignee. Afterwards when all the evidence had been taken and it had been established that the assignee knew of the payment, this was amended to the statement that, if he did know of it, he had no power to consent to it, and that his consent would not be binding, the payment being a fraud upon the Court. Held that the amendment at the stage when it was made was not permissible. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances

In the case of judgments in rem the same rule holds good with regard to persons who are strangers to the suit. Where a decree has been obtained by the fraud and collusion of both the parties to the suit, it is binding upon the parties. It is also binding upon the privies of the parties, except probably where the collusive fraud has been on a provision of the law enacted for the benefit of such privies. But persons represented by, but not claiming through, the parties to the suit may, in any subsequent proceeding, whether as plaintiff or defendant, treat the previous judgment so obtained by fraud and collusion as a mere nullity, provided the fraud and collusion be clearly established. This was done with the object of protecting the property against the claims of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff occupied the house, ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent. In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house, and obtained an ex-parte decree. He applied for execution of the decree, but allowed the execution-proceedings to drop. In 1883 he made a fresh application for execution. Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration of his title to the house in question, and of his right to retain possession, alleging that the defendant was a mere benamidar; that the sale-deed and the ex-parte decree were sham and collusive transactions in fraud of the plaintiff's creditors; and that the defendant was merely a trustee for him. Held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree passed in 1880 in the defendant's favour, though it was a collusive decree. The plaintiff could not get the judgment set aside which the defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him, the object of that trust being to protect the plaintiff's property in fraud of his creditors. Even if such a trust enforceable by the Courts could arise out of such a turpis causa, the question was whether this continued to subsist and would be enforced, when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. The general principle is that where a defendant has suffered a judgment to pass against him, the matter is then placed beyond his control. Held also, upon the general principle of res judicata, that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the question of fraud in the present suit, which he might and ought to have urged in the former litigation. Held further that the suit, if regarded as one for setting aside a decree obtained by fraud, was barred by limitation, such fraud as there was being as well known to the plaintiff in 1880 as in 1883, when the present suit was filed. The instruments used for measuring the quantity of rainfall were two: a rain-gauge and a gutter attached to the roof of the shed. The accused, who registered the quantity of rainfall, were entitled to a commission on each bet. They were charged, under s. 4, cls. (b) and (c), of Bombay Act IV of 1887, with keeping the shed for the purpose of a "common gaming-house." Held that Bombay Act IV of 1887 did not apply to betting. The shed in question was undoubtedly a common betting place, and the instruments used were instruments of betting, but there is no law in India which makes betting illegal. There is a distinction between betting and gaming. There must be a game before there is gaming; and to constitute a game, there must be a contest, and an active participation of certain persons is also necessary. In the present case there was no contest, no players, and no active part taken by the betters who merely watched the falling of rain. Rain-betting is therefore not a game, and the place where it was carried on not a "common gaming-house." QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAROTTAMDAS MOTIRAM

18. ———— Bombay Acts IV of 1837 and I of 1890, s. 3—Betting on rainfall—"Common gaming-house"—"Instrument of gaming"—"Used"—Meaning of these words in s. 3 of the Act.—The accused rented a place near a public road at Bombay at R250 a month. There they erected a shed containing eleven pedhis or stalls. In the centre of the shed they put up, in a prominent position, a clock for keeping accurate time. The stalls were let out to certain persons, each at the rate of R100 a month. The roofs of several adjoining houses surrounded this place. From one of these roofs rain fell into the place. Numbers of people resorted to this place for the purpose of rain-betting. The rain-betters staked certain sums of money on the chance whether the rain would fall or would not fall within a certain time. Aftre making the bets, the parties betting would go to one of the stall-keepers, and get him to register the particulars of the bet in a book kept for the purpose, and each deposited with the stall-keeper the amount staked. The bets as to rain falling were determined by persons at the place seeing the rain falling in a stream from such of the roofs of the adjoining houses as had been chosen by the betters on making the bets, and seeing also the time, by the clock, if there was any doubt as to the time. After the bet was determined, the winner received from the stall-keeper the amount of the stake. Under these circumstances, the accused were charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with committing the offence of keeping a "common gaming-house" under s. 4, cls. (a), (b), and (c), of the Bombay Gambling Act (IV of 1887), as amended by Act I of 1890. On a reference by the Magistrate under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882),—Held that to bring the place in question within the definition of a "common gaming-house" in s. 3 of the Bombay Gaming Act (IV of 1887) as amended by Bombay Act I of 1890, the instrument of gaming or wagering must be in the place itself, either kept there, or brought there and used there, for profit and gain. It is not sufficient that wagers are made in the place upon or by means of some article or other which is outside the place. The roofs of the houses surrounding the place in question could not therefore be regarded as "instruments of gaming, either kept or used therein," within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act. Held also that the word "used" in s. 3 of the Act, as amended by Act I of 1890, must be taken in its ordinary sense, as meaning actually used. Any article which is in fact used as a means of wagering comes within the definition of "an instrument of gaming," even though it may not have been specially devised or intended for that purpose. Held per TELANG, J., that neither the stalls nor the books in which the bets were registered, nor the money staked and deposited with the stall-keeper, were instruments of gaming or wagering. 10. ——— *Right of succession to ghatwali tenure in Beerbhoom—Beng. Reg. The word "descendants" therefore in s. 2 of Bengal Regulation XXIX of 1814 is not to be construed in its restricted meaning, but includes the widow of a deceased ghatwal, who may therefore be one of his heirs. Lall Dharee Roy v. *Brojo Lall Singh, 10 W. 21. ———— Resumption—Compensation.—In the Khurruckpore ghatwali mehals the profits of the lands, minus the quit-rent paid to the zamindar, represented the remuneration given to the ghatwals for police services. Government illegally resumed those lands, dispensing with the services of the ghatwals, and settled the tenures with the ghatwals at half the rent current in that part of the country. The resumption proceedings having been set aside, it remained to determine to whom and in what proportions Government should refund the half jumma taken by it as rent from the ghatwals during the period of settlement. Held that, inasmuch as the ghatwals rendered no service during the period of settlement, the moiety of the jumma retained by them was ample compensation for any loss they might have sustained, and the zamindar was entitled to receive the whole of the moiety taken by Government, partly as quit-rent due to him and partly as compensation for loss of the ghatwals' services during the continuance of the settlement. tenures—Mitakshara law inapplicable to ghatwali tenure—Family custom inapplicable to ghatwali tenure.—A ghatwali tenure in Khurruckpore is transferable if the zamindar assents and accepts the transfer. Such assent and acceptance may be presumed from the fact of the zamindar having made no objections to a transfer for a period of over twelve years, and when such a fact has been found, a Court ought to recognize such a transfer. In a suit brought to recover possession of a ghatwali tenure situated in Khurruckpore which had been brought to sale in execution of a decree against the previous ghatwali and purchased by the defendants, the plaintiffs sought to rely on the Mitakshara law and certain family custom for the purpose of establishing their right. The lower Court, applying such law and custom, found that the tenure was transferable, and that it was joint ancestral property, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for two-thirds of the property, and the defendants a decree for the remaining one-third, holding that to be the extent of the previous ghatwali interest which had been purchased by the defendants. Held on appeal that the decision of the lower Court was erroneous; that in dealing with a ghatwali tenure the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures, and not to any particular school of law or the customs of any particular family; and that a ghatwali, being created for specific purpose, has its own particular incidents, and cannot be subject to any system of law affecting only a particular class or family. On a question whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in the Kharagpore zamindari, in Bhagulpore, in execution of a decree against the ghatwal, had transferred the inheritance as against the ghatwal's son,—Held, in regard to a proved custom, that the ghatwali was not inalienable, but might be aliened by the ghatwal or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such alienation was assented to by the zamindar, this power of alienation not being limited to the life-interest of the ghatwal for the time being, but forming part of this right and title to the ghatwali. 5. ———— Transfer by gift—Failure to prove alleged inequitable advantage taken by donee over donor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16 and 17.—The heir to a share in an ancestral estate, out of possession and at a time when he expected that his right would be contested by another claimant, made a gift of his title to his brother's son, providing that he, the donor, should have nothing to do with the cost of getting possession. After the donee had obtained possession, the donor sued to have the gift set aside. The gift, having been maintained in the first Court, was set aside by the Appellate Court on the ground that, it having been made without consideration and imprudently as regarded the donor's interests, he had had no opportunity to obtain any advice from an independent person, but had only had that advice which came from, or was given on behalf of, the donee. Thus the gift was not an equitable transaction which the Court should enforce. The Appellate Court had, however, affirmed the finding of the first Court, that the donor, with full knowledge of the contents of the deed, had voluntarily executed it, and that he had been apprehensive of incurring costs in litigation in getting possession of his inherited share. Held that the Appellate Court was in error in taking it that the question was whether the transaction was an equitable one which that Court should enforce. The defendant was not asking the Court to enforce the deed; and the reason why the gift was without consideration was explained by the circumstances. The reasons given by the Appellate Court for reversing the decision of the first Court were insufficient. It did not appear that unsound advice was given to the donor by, or on behalf of, the donee, or that confidence was reposed by the donor so as to bring the case within s. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. There was only the donor's statement that he had confidence, which was not sufficient proof of it. Whether a gift made as this had been should be set aside, as being inequitable between the parties, would depend on the circumstances existing at the time of the gift, and not on subsequent events. ——— Wrongful dismissal of public servant, Suit against Government for—Contract of service—Public servant—Payment of monthly wages.—A suit for wrongful dismissal by one of its servants will lie against the Government. In a suit by a subordinate officer in the Public Works Department for wrongful dismissal against the Government, in which it was admitted that there was no time of service fixed, and in which the plaintiff put in a memorandum of agreement between himself and the Government, stipulating that he should give six months' notice of his intention to leave the service of the Government,—Held that the hiring was indefinite; and that, although the plaintiff had bound himself to give six months' notice prior to leaving their service, there was no corresponding obligation on the Government to give notice before dismissing him. The Government, however, would not be allowed to exercise this power capriciously, or to the damage of the servant. An indefinite hiring in India does not mean a hiring for a year. The mere payment of wages monthly is not enough to show that a hiring is a monthly hiring. Hughes v. Secretary of State for India in Council . 7 B. L. R., 688

1. ———— Renewal of note—Loss of negotiability by note becoming covered with endorsements—"Allonge."—In a suit by a Hindu widow as the holder and last endorsee of a Government promissory note of the 5½ per cent. loan, 1859-60, to enforce renewal of the note, it appeared that in the advertisement of the loan in the Gazette, it was stated that "the practice and rules heretofore in use in regard to the renewal, etc., of promissory notes will be adhered to in respect of the promissory notes of this loan;" that it was the practice of the Government to insist on the production of the promissory note when the interest due on it was applied for, and to endorse the payment of such interest on the back of the note; that the note of which renewal was sought had in consequence become so covered with endorsements that a slip of paper had been attached to it by the Government for the purpose of allowing further endorsements on payment of interest to be made; and that in consequence of having this paper attached, and being covered with endorsements, the note was practically unnegotiable. The defence was that the Government had a discretion as to granting or refusing renewal, and had, on objection made by the reversioners, exercised that discretion in refusing to renew the note. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show any legal right to renewal against the Government. Held on appeal that the practice of insisting on endorsement of payments of interest on the note as a preliminary to receipt of interest thereon having rendered it practically unnegotiable, the Government were bound to renew the note. 2. ———— Theft of note—Purchaser, Rights of—Title.—In the month of October 1878, a Government promissory note for R10,000 was sent from the A treasury to the Public Debt Office for enfacement. The note was duly received at the office, and its receipt was entered in the proper book. The business of the Public Debt Office is carried on by certain officers of the B Bank. The note was stolen from the office, and endorsed over by the thief to a person who sold it to C for full value. The note bore two blank endorsements prior to that of the thief. In the same month C applied to the B Bank for a loan, which the Bank agreed to make upon the security of C's promissory note, and the deposit of Government notes. The form of application for the loan specified by their numbers the notes which were to be deposited. One of these was the stolen note. Before finally agreeing to the advance, the officers of the Bank in charge of the Loan Department sent the application, showing the numbers of the notes to the Public Debt Office, and received it back with a memorandum upon it to the effect that the notes were not stopped. On the 23rd October the loan was made, and the securities were given. Shortly afterwards the theft was discovered and the note was stopped. In November the Bank, at the request of C, sent the note to the Public Debt Office for payment of interest, and the note was detained by the Superintendent. The Bank then required C to repay the amount of his loan. This he refused to do unless all his securities were handed over to him. In a suit by the Bank against C upon his promissory note,—Held that he was not entitled to refuse payment until the stolen note was given up to him. Per GARTH, C.J.—The Public Debt Branch of the B Bank is as much a Government office as if it were carried on separately under the management of Government officers. The note was therefore stolen whilst virtually in the hands of the Government, and was, when detained by the Superintendent of the Public Debt Office, held by him as the agent of the Government on behalf of the true owner at the time when it was stolen, and the Bank had no right or power to take it in their private capacity out of the hands of the Public Debt Office. When an instrument, such as the note in question, has been stolen, the person from whom it was stolen has a good title to it, not only as against the thief, but as against any person who subsequently becomes the holder, unless such person can prove that the instrument had become negotiable at the time it was stolen, and that he had obtained it boná fide for value without notice of the theft. In this case the note was stolen whilst in the custody of the Public Debt Office before C had any title to it. The Bank, therefore, as agents for the

There being no proof given by either party as to whether the istahar abovementioned was or was not duly published,—Held that the publication of the istahar must be presumed, having regard to the presumption in favour of the due performance of official acts Held also that, even conduct of the officers was in violation of their duty as such officers and in direct contravention of the express orders of the Government. Held also that

Since 1819 the holders of these shilatri lands had paid to the grantees and their heirs assessment (or rent) at a fixed rate which before the grant they used to pay to Government. In a suit brought by an heir of A and B in 1868 to recover an enhanced rent or assessment levied on these lands,—Held that, though the language of the exception was so large that it might have been construed to exclude any right on the part of the grantees to receive rent (or revenue), yet that, as the defendant or his predecessors had, ever since 1819, paid to the plaintiff and his predecessors the revenue paid before that time to Government, that revenue passed under the indenture of 1819 to the grantees in the deed. On A's death, the grant made by him was confirmed by his legitimate son, the appellant, in certain pottahs, in which, however, no reference was made to the provision in the earlier grant by the father for the substitution, in the event of the mortgagor redeeming, of villages yielding an equal revenue. After the passing of Act XIII of 1866, the mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption and ousted B. Held by the Privy Council that the appellant was bound by his father's agreement in the pottah of 1846 to make over to B villages yielding a revenue equal to that of the village which had been redeemed. An inam, existing under a grant made in 1811, became in 1863 the subject of arrangement between the zamindar, who had succeeded the grantor in the zamindari, and the inamdars. This resulted in what was either a confirmation of the original grant on terms more favourable to the zamindar, or a new grant of an estate in all respects, save as to the rent, similar to the previously existing estate, which was a tenancy in perpetuity. Subsequently the son and successor of the grantor of 1863 claimed to have determined the tenancy by a notice to quit. Held that it was not determinable by such notice. Unsettled palayam held on service tenure—Commutation of service for quit-rent—Enfranchisement—Inam pottah issued to Hindu widow by Government—Effect of acknowledging her absolute title to estate.—The palayam of G was granted during the Mahomedan rule to a Hindu on service tenure, the condition being that the grantee should maintain a body of police for the service of the paramount power. This palayam was not brought under Permanent Settlement under the provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802. The last male holder died in 1860 leaving him surviving a widow K and a daughter C. In 1865 the Government discontinued the service and, in lieu thereof and of the reversionary interest of the Crown, imposed a quit-rent, and an inam pottah was issued to K by the Inam Commissioner by which her title to the estate was acknowledged by the Government of Madras, and the estate was confirmed to her as her absolute property subject to the quit-rent. Held that the effect of the inam pottah was not to confer on K any new estate, but merely as between the Crown and the owners of the estate to release the reversionary right of the Crown. 27. ———— Grant of profits of vatan deshmukhi in perpetuity—Hereditary gomastahs—How far such grant valid after the death of the grantor.—By a sanad duly executed on the 20th August 1850, the plaintiff's father, Y, who was a vatandar deshmukh, appointed the defendants and their heirs hereditary vatani gomastahs, and granted, by way of remuneration for their services, R201 and a quantity of grain out of the annual vatan income in perpetuity. In consideration of certain sums obtained from the defendants, Y mortgaged the vatan property to the defendants, who subsequently sued Y upon the mortgage. The suit was referred to arbitration, and an award was duly made, and a decree upon the award was obtained by the defendants against Y. In 1859 execution of the decree was granted against Y. In 1864 the services connected with the vatan were discontinued by Government. In 1871 Y died. The defendants, having kept the decree alive, sought in 1881 to execute the decree against the plaintiff's eldest brother, who filed objections, but his objections were overruled, and execution was ordered to issue. The plaintiffs brought this suit in 1883 for a declaration that the defendants were no longer entitled to the allowance under the sanad, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from the execution of the decree against the vatan. The defendants contended (inter aliâ) that the sanad could not be cancelled, Y having granted it as full owner, and that the receipt by the defendants of the allowance had been adverse since 1864, when their services had ceased. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Courts, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaratory decree and to the injunction prayed for. Although the management of the vatan was vested by the sanad in the defendants and their heirs in perpetuity under the title of gomastahs, nevertheless the remuneration attached to the office by Y was in derogation of his successor's rights, and was therefore, at any rate in the absence of proof of custom, invalid against them. Held also that, having regard to the terms of the sanad, it was in the power of the original grantor or any of his successors to determine the office and the remuneration at any time after the vatan services ceased in 1864. 28. ———— Proprietary right of khot to khoti vatani land—Right of such khot to forest land and to timber and wood growing thereon—Government, Right of, to appropriate forest preserves, assessed or unassessed land—Construction of such khoti grants.—The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging that the village of mouzah Ambedu, in the Ratnagiri District, was his khoti vatani village in which his proprietary right extended to raise crops of any kind or to preserve and cut the jungle and forest trees on the lands therein. He complained that since 1855-56 the Collector of the district had prohibited him from exercising the above alleged rights, and prayed that the obstruction might be removed and R600 awarded as damages. The plaintiff based his claim mainly on the settlement of 1788, Dunlop's proclamation of 1824, and several other khoti grants in the district. The defendant denied that the plaintiff had any proprietary right in the village, and contended (inter aliâ) that the khot derived his rights from the yearly kabuliats passed by him, that his right to cultivate did not extend to cultivating the jungle land, and that his position was no better than that of a patel. The joint Judge who tried the suit held that under the settlement of 1788 the plaintiff as khot was entitled to the jungle produce, except timber; that in virtue of Dunlop's proclamation of 1824 the plaintiff acquired an unqualified right to the forest land in the village and timber growing on it, and that the defendant had no right to appropriate assessed or unassessed land for forest purposes, and awarded the plaintiff the sum of R600 as damages. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court,—Held that the application of the general rules of construction of grants to a subject by the State requires that language of such general import as is ordinarily to be found in the khot's sanads should be taken most beneficially to the State. Held accordingly that, in the absence of a sanad expressly granting it, the ownership neither of the soil nor of cultivated or uncultivated lands passes by the grant of the vatandari khotship. Held also that the grant of the vatani khoti did not make the khot a perpetual tenant of Government in respect of all lands in the village, except dhara lands. Held on the authority of Tajubai v. Sub-Collector of some from the Collector and the rest from the Superintendent of Survey; that under his kabuliats he was entitled to take up the lands direct from Government, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to the assessment due on the lands which he had refused to accept. Lastly, the defendant denied that he had acted in fraud of the plaintiff's rights in acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. Held on the construction of the sanad that, the plaintiff being the khot of the whole of the village exclusive of the land granted in inam, the maphi istava lands were included in the khoti grant; that the khot's interest in them, whatever might be the extent of it, was not separable from the khoti estate; and that the khot had a reversionary interest in the maphi istava lands as well as in the suti lands which had been abandoned by their former occupants. Held also that the defendant was not precluded by the terms of his lease from acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. The engagement to furnish accounts of the balance of the village revenue at the end of each year was simply an engagement to furnish the plaintiff with information which would be of use to him, and which indeed it would be necessary for him to possess when he resumed the management of the village on the determination of the lease. It imported nothing more than that; and the whole transaction evidenced by the kabuliats was merely an assignment in consideration of a fixed annual payment to be made by defendant to plaintiff, of the rights and liabilities of the latter to be exercised and discharged for a certain period by the former. For that period the defendant was the maktadar or tenant of the plaintiff's khotship; and though a certain confidence was necessarily reposed in him in connection with a tenancy of this nature, and though he was bound jealously and scrupulously to protect the plaintiff's interests, so far as they were in his keeping, yet he was not bound by the strict rule which prohibits a trustee from acquiring for himself an estate of his cestui que trust. Under clause 7th of the kabuliat of 1858, the defendant was at liberty either to take up waste lands himself or put in tenants; if he put in tenants on leases, the special advantages of any leases were to expire with his own lease. But the actual occupation of land either by himself or by his tenants was not to be interfered with at the determination of his lease, so long as he or they continued to pay the assessment according to the practice of the village. The defendant could therefore, without the intervention of the Collector, have taken up the maphi istava lands in suit and become himself the tenant; and he could have also acquired the suti lands from former sutidars, or taken them up if waste, without the intervention of the Survey Superintendent. The circumstance that when acquiring the lands he needlessly invoked the assistance of the revenue authorities would not invalidate his title if it could not be impugned on other grounds. Held further that the defendant was not guilty of fraud, as there was no evidence to show that he had acted in a surreptitious or secret manner in acquiring the lands in suit. On the contrary, his action in applying to the revenue authorities was a sign of his good faith rather than of any fraudulent intent. The plaintiff was therefore not entitled to oust the defendant from the lands in suit. FAKI ISMAIL v. MAHOMED ISMAIL . . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 595

31. ———— Invalidity of grant, or covenant by grantor, in favour of person unborn upon a condition which may never arise—Restraint upon grantor's own power of alienating —Hindu law.—The purpose of a grant was to oblige the grantor and his successors in a raj estate to give in some way or other maintenance to all the descendants of four persons living at the date of the grant, by declaring that, on the failure of the raja of the day at any future time to maintain such descendants, the latter were to have an immediate right to four of the raj villages. This might be regarded as imparting a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition, which might prevent its ever taking effect; or it might be regarded as a covenant intended to run with the raj estate, in favour of non-existing covenantees, to give the villages to them in the event specified. Held that in either view it was equally ineffectual. Held also that the High Court had correctly construed the instrument in holding that the words "If ever in the time of my descendants you are not provided with means of maintenance" formed a condition which also was unfulfilled—the descendants being in possession of villages granted to them by the raja, other than those claimed, more than sufficient for their maintenance. The deed of settlement then went on to provide that, if at any time the heirs of the settlor, or whoever might be in possession of the rest of his estate, should demand from R, or the person in possession of the lands assigned to her, the revenue assessed on those lands, then R and her heirs would be entitled to claim and take possession of the legal share in the settlor's estate to which she would be entitled under the Mahomedan law of inheritance. Held that, as regards a person who had acquired a portion of the settled property partly by private sale and partly by sale at auction, the settlement contravened the provisions of s. 6 of Regulation No. XXXI of 1803, and the heirs of the settlor could not be compelled to pay the land revenue due on the portion of the settled lands acquired by the said purchaser, nor had the purchaser any right under the deed of settlement to a proportionate part of the inheritance which would have come to Rahmat-un-nissa from her father. The grantee survived the grantor, and by ikrarnama acknowledged the succeeding zamindar to be entitled to the village. The grantee had, however, already executed a pottah, described therein as permanent, to a lessee. The latter obtained possession, and from him after the death of the original grantee for life the zamindars who succeeded the grantor accepted rent at the rate stipulated in the pottah, and did not disturb his possession. This suit, after the death of the lessee, claimed the village as part of the inherited zamindari, the defence being that the lessee was perpetual. Held (1) that the original grant not having extended to more than the life of the grantee, the pottah was void as against the successor in title of the grantor, and not merely voidable after the grantee's death. The acceptance of rent at the rate in the pottah could not have the effect of confirming it in its entirety, which, according to the construction of the High Court, would have been for a permanent estate. The duration of the pottah could not exceed that of the original grant; nor could an admission, taken by the High Court to have been that the acceptance of rent had confirmed the permanency of the lease, preclude the claim for legal rights, even supposing that admission to have been made. The matter in contest was as to the circumstances under which the lessee was allowed to remain in possession and their legal effect. And on the evidence, the lessee had been allowed to remain as a mokurari tenant for his life. (2) The suit for possession was not barred under article 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) on the ground that a decree declaratory of title to have the pottah cancelled might have been sued for in the lessee's lifetime under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. (3) The possession of a tenant for life is not rendered adverse within the meaning of Act XV of 1877 by a notice from the tenant that he claims to be holding on a perpetual or hereditary tenure. Secondary evidence of lost grant by Government.—In a suit to declare the plaintiff's title to a shrotrium village which was included in the jaghir granted in 1763 by the Nawab of the Carnatic to the East India Company, it appeared that the village in question had been previously granted by the Nawab free of assessment to the Kazi of Madras as an endowment for his office, and afterwards to the son of the first grantee personally, without condition of service. In 1779 the British Government confirmed the village in perpetuity to the second grantee on account of the office of Kazi which he filled, and to his direct heirs who should be fit for that office. In 1862 on failure of the direct male line, the grantee's grandson by a daughter was nominated to the office of Kazi with the approval of Government, who directed he should hold the village, adding that it had been assigned as an endowment for that office. In the same years the Inam Commissioner confirmed it as a personal inam, enfranchised it and granted a title-deed to the holder. In 1866 Government ordered that the village should be registered as an endowment of the Kaziship and the title-deed cancelled, and in 1868 notified in the Gazette that the title-deed which was not produced was cancelled. Between the dates of the above order and notification the Kazi transferred the village to the plaintiff under a deed of perpetual lease and placed him in possession. But in 1873 Government resumed the village and subsequently directed that the whole of its net revenue be paid to the Kazi. The Kazi from whom the plaintiff claimed died in 1868. An inam of certain menkaval lands, which had formerly been allotted to the village watchman as inam, had been granted to the Kazi in 1802-3; they were cultivated by raiyats who paid varam to the inamdar. The order of resumption in 1873 had no reference to these lands, but in 1877 Government issued pottahs to the raiyats. Held (1) that the grant of 1779, the original document not having been produced by the plaintiff, was sufficiently proved by a translation produced from official custody and certified by the Collector in 1838 to be correct and attested by the Persian translator to Government; (2) that it was competent for the Government in 1779 to alter the nature of the grant of 1761 as an act of State; (3) that on the right construction of Regulation IV of 1831 and Act IV of 1862, and in view of the facts that the plaintiff must have been aware of the nature of the tenure and of the contents of the grant of 1779 and the cancellation of the inam title-deed, the Government were not acting ultra vires in cancelling the enfranchisement, etc.; (4) that the Kazi through whom the plaintiff claimed having died in 1868, there was no reason to question the resumption in 1873; (5) that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the menkaval lands, the action of Government in issuing pottahs to the raiyats being ultra vires. Issues first framed on appeal as to the plaintiff's claim to mirasi rights and menkaval lands. Evidence of mirasi rights considered. KARUNAKARA MENON v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the guarantee,—Held that the covenant to transfer the mortgage of the Moulmein was independent, and not a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right of action. Held also on the facts that the representation in the charter party that the Caroline was, while lying at Bombay, "tight, strong, and staunch," etc., amounted to a contract that the ship should be so, and the defendants' guarantee covered it. Held also that the defendants, not being parties to the charter party and not having bound themselves to any assessment of damages, were not called on to pay the penalty specified in the last clause of the charter-party, but that the damages against them must be the actual damages which the plaintiffs on N B's behalf suffered in consequence of C's breach of contract,—that is, R21,500 paid under the contract, and the balance of freight that would have gone to reduce N B's debt and interest on both sums from the date of the contract. (2) of that section refers, not to a judicial reference, but to a ministerial act. Proceedings had been taken for the appointment of a guardian of a minor under that section in the High Court and afterwards in a Mofussil Court. The latter reported the case to the High Court, and the Chief Justice thereupon directed that the proceedings in the Mofussil Court should be stayed, and that a Judge of the Original Side of the High Court should hear and determine the matter. Held that such direction was in order, and that the Judge who determined the matter had jurisdiction to do so. Held also that, although a petitioner had failed in his application on all points except the removal of the guardian, he was entitled to his costs up to and including the order removing the guardian, as he must be taken to have acted so far for the benefit of the minor. 57. ———————— Act XL of 1858, s. 18—Mortgage by certificated guardian without sanction of District Court—Mortgage money applied partly to benefit of minor's estate—Suit by minor to set aside the mortgage—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65.—S. 18 of the Bengal Minors' Act (XL of 1858) does not imply that a sale or mortgage or a lease for more than five years, executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction of the Civil Court, is illegal and void ab initio; but the proviso means that in the absence of such sanction the certificated guardian, who otherwise would have all the powers which the minor would have if he were of age, shall be relegated to the position which he would occupy if he had been granted no certificate at all. If any one chooses to take a mortgage or a lease for a term exceeding five years under these circumstances, the transaction is on the basis of no certificate having been granted. In a suit brought by the guardian of a Mahomedan minor for a declaration that a mortgage-deed executed by the minor's mother was null and void to the extent of the minor's share and for partition and possession of such share, it was found that a considerable proportion of the moneys received by the mortgagor had been applied for the benefit of the minor's estate by discharging incumbrances imposed on it by his deceased father. It appeared that at the time of the mortgage the mother held a certificate of guardianship under the Bengal Minors Act, and that she had not obtained from the Civil Court any order sanctioning the mortgage under s. 18 of that Act. Held that the omission to obtain such sanction did not make the mortgage illegal or void ab initio, but relegated the parties to the position in which they would have been if no certificate had been granted, i.e., that of a transaction by a Mahomedan mother affecting to mortgage the property of her minor son, with whose estate she had no power to interfere. Held that this fell within the class of cases in which it has been decided that if a person sells or mortgages another's property having no legal or equitable right to do so, and that other benefits by the transaction, the latter cannot have it set aside without making restitution to the person whose money has been applied for the benefit of the estate. Held that, even if mortgages executed by a certificated guardian without the sanction required by s. 18 of the Bengal Minors Act were void, the section did not make them illegal; and, with reference to s. 65 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff could not obtain a decree for a declaration that the mortgage was inoperative as against his share, except on condition of his making restitution to the extent of any moneys advanced by the defendant under the mortgage-deed which had gone to the benefit of the plaintiff's estate, or had been expended on his maintenance, education, or marriage. Mauji Ram v. *Tara Sing, I. In the order so obtained, the rate of interest at which the money was to be raised was not specified. On a question whether, there being no proof of the necessity or expediency of agreeing to pay interest at a rate so high as eighteen per cent., the agreement to pay at this rate was rightly set aside by the High Court, which decreed interest at twelve per cent.,—Held that the proper construction of the order, and the one most favourable to the lender regarding the rate of interest, was that the guardian was authorized to borrow only at a reasonable rate of interest, and that consequently the decree of the High Court was right. It appeared that no formalities had been observed in coming to the partition, and no record preserved of the proceedings except a list representing the result arrived at; that the division was effected simply on reference to a thakbust map, an average rental per bigha taken as the basis thereof, and a number of bighas allotted in proportion to each individual's share. None of the ordinary precautions were taken for the protection of the interest of minors. Held that the partition was not made in such way, and under such circumstances as to be in itself obligatory on the minor, who had the option of repudiating it when he came of age or within a reasonable period after that date. Held also that the minor could only be held to have accepted the partition if he had acted in such a way to the plaintiffs as to lead them naturally to suppose that he had done so. Under the Hindu law, the power of a manager for an infant heir to charge an ancestral estate is a limited and qualified one, to be exercised in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. Where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the boná fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for the loan, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so enquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. The mere creation of a charge by a manager, securing a proper debt, cannot be viewed as improvident management; and a boná fide creditor should not suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived. SEETUL PERSHAD SINGH v. GOUR DYAL SINGH [1 W. R., 283

99. ——— Sale of minor's property for transactions by guardian not for benefit of minor—Want of necessity—Ground for setting aside sale.—In 1850 the guardian of a minor (his step-mother) by an ikrarnamah among other things charged the minor's ancestral estate with the payment of R27,000 in favour of L, the amount of his alleged claim against the estate, respecting which an appeal was then pending, but to which estate he was himself a debtor, undertaking at the same time to prosecute certain claims against M, L agreeing to advance money for that purpose and to resist certain claims brought by M against the minor's estate. In February 1851, M having obtained judgment against the estate for R26,986, and taken out execution thereon, the estate was advertised for sale on the 20th of that month. To prevent the sale, L advanced the amount of the judgment-debt, and on the 19th of that month commenced a suit against the guardian, in which he claimed the R26,986, the amount advanced by him, and the R27,000 agreed to be paid him by the ikrarnama, and the further sum of R1,354 alleged to have been paid by him for the proceedings against M, making together R55,341. On the following day the guardian filed a confession of judgment admitting the debt, hypothecating the minor's estate, and undertaking to pay the same by instalments, with the exception of the R27,000, at 6 per cent. interest. The instalments not being paid, L in 1853 took out execution on the judgment, and under the execution put up the estate for sale, and became the purchaser himself. On the minor attaining his majority, he brought a suit to set aside the sale, impeaching the transaction as fraudulent and collusively obtained by L from his late guardian. The Courts in India set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, and decreed the restitution of the estate, with mesne profits and damages, subject to the repayment by way of reduction of the R26,986 at 5 per cent. Upon appeal such decree was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, first on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent and collusive and prejudicial to the estate of the minor, there being no evidence to show the necessity for the guardian obtaining the pecuniary assistance sought, or to justify her submitting to L's extraordinary terms contained in the ikrarnama, by allowing, without consideration, his doubtful claim against the minor's estate, to which he really was a debtor himself; and secondly, that L, who set up the charge, had failed to relieve himself of the burden which the Hindu law cast upon him of showing that he had at least good ground for supposing that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor's estate. In setting aside the ikrarnama and sale, interest was allowed to L on the R26,000 advanced by him at the rate of 6 per cent. contracted for in the ikrarnama in lieu of 5 per cent. awarded by the Sudder Court. Such a modification of the decree of the Court below held not sufficient to deprive the respondent of his costs of appeal. The case of Ali Hossein v. Badal Khan, S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1863, 19th May, where it was held that there is no difference to be made between an innocent purchaser and one tainted with fraud which had brought about an execution-sale, observed upon and dissented from. 100. ——— Hindu law—Joint family—Release obtained from person just come of age.—The plaintiff as a joint member of the defendant's family sued to set aside a release obtained from him by the defendant and for partition, etc. The plaintiff was the son of one L, and the defendant was the plaintiff's nephew and grandson of L, being the son of T and elder brother of the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that L and his brother J were joint and had carried on a family business; that J died childless, and that on L's death in 1868 the whole family property passed into the hands of T, his eldest son, on whose death it came into the possession of the defendant as eldest male member of the family, although belonging to a younger generation than the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that in 1882, shortly after he came of age, the defendant induced him to sign a release of all his claims upon the estate in consideration of the sum of R25,000. He prayed that this release might be set aside. The defendant denied the plaintiff's allegations as to the release. Held that the release must be set aside. The defendant stood in the relation of a guardian to the plaintiff. Releases executed immediately after a ward comes of age are looked upon with suspicion. The circumstances must show the fullest deliberation on the part of the ward and perfect good faith on the part of the guardian. The circumstances of this release did not fulfil these requirements. There was not that absolute fairness and good faith required by the relations of the parties, and the signing of the release was an improvident act which a prudent person would not have done with full knowledge of the circumstances. Act XX of 1864, ss. 18 and 29—Guardian's authority to contract debts for the marriage of his ward without the sanction of the Court—Debts contracted for pilgrimage expenses—Guardian's power to acknowledge debts—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19.—A minor cannot be bound personally by contracts entered into by a guardian which do not purport to charge his estate. Act XX of 1864 gives no power to a guardian or administrator to bind his ward by personal covenants. A guardian appointed under Act XX of 1864 can pledge the property of his ward for purposes beneficial to the minor, but not as a security for money previously borrowed which the minor was under no obligation to pay. Under s. 29 of Act XX of 1864, a guardian cannot contract a debt for the marriage of his ward without the sanction of the Court. Debts contracted by the guardian of a minor for a pilgrimage not undertaken in the discharge of an urgent spiritual duty, when it was obligatory on him to perform, are not necessaries for which the minor would be held liable. A guardian has no authority to acknowledge a debt on behalf of his ward so as to give the creditor a fresh start for the period of limitation, as he is not an agent on the part of his ward within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Sobhanadri Appa Rau v. *Sriramulu, I. 2. ——— Hereditary gomastah appointed to collect desmukhi allowances—Derivation of his title such that the deshmukh could not dismiss him—Sanad, Construction of.—As to whether a deshmukh could dismiss the holder of the paid office of hereditary gomastah, appointed to collect, in the vatan of the former, the deshmukhi allowances from the villages, it was shown by documentary evidence that the gomastah's ancestor had been appointed by the ruling power of the day, from which authority also the deshmukhi had been derived. It was also shown that the hereditary gomastah's title was independent of the deshmukh, and that the latter could not displace him. No change had been made under the British rule from what had prevailed as to this under the Peishwa; but such evidence as there was, accorded with the above. Held that the right of the gomastah to act as such and to receive the payments had either been granted or else had been so recognized and confirmed by an authority binding on the deshmukh that he could not deprive the gomastah of his office, which the Government had conferred upon him; and that the deshmukh had not the right, as against him, to collect the allowance himself directly, either from the village officers or from the treasury. Bombay Act III of 1874. Kalu Narayan Kulkarni v. Hanmappa bin Bhimappa; I. L. R., 5 Bom., 435, referred to and approved. The childless widow of a vatandár, deceased in 1847, was the recognized vatandar in possession in 1865. She mortgaged two villages of the vatan to the father of the respondents. The latter two, after litigation, retained possession in 1886, by order of the Commissioner in the Revenue Department, until there should be a decree of Court to the contrary. The widow, according to the judgment below, had held the vatan adversely to her late husband's son, the plaintiff, who was born in 1848 of her co-widow, and he was the true heir, entitled from his birth. But the High Court gave effect to the adverse possession of the widow for the period of limitation supporting the mortgage. The plaintiff was the sole heir of the widow, his stepmother, who died in 1877. The appellant contended that the vatan, as inherited by him, was free from the mortgage encumbrance, and that he was entitled to possession. Held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that the mortgage was void against the heir, and had no force beyond the life of the vatandar who had executed it. While this attachment was pending, the Collector, on the 13th December 1878, sent a certificate to the Court, and informed it that the proceeds of the vatan were not liable to attachment under ss. 10 and 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. The certificate referred to the profits of the vatan which had accrued due before the passing of the Act, and also to those which had been subsequently assigned by the Collector as remuneration of the officiator. The Court, on receiving it, removed the attachment and dismissed the application on the 11th January 1879. The order was affirmed in appeal. The Collector referred the matter to his subordinates for inquiry, and the certificate was not issued until the 13th March 1890, that is, more than twelve years after the death of the last holder N. Held that, although more than twelve years had elapsed, the Court could not refuse to act on the certificate of the Collector, as provided by s. 10 of the Vatandars Act. 9. ———————— and ss. 25 and 56 Representative vatandar—Attachment—Jurisdiction of Revenue and Civil Courts—Res judicata.—A decree of the District Court at Solapur, made in 1863, declared the plaintiff to be an hereditary deputy vatandar of a certain deshpande vatan vested in the defendants as hereditary vatandars, and as such deputy entitled to receive a certain sum annually out of the income of the vatan. The plaintiff received moneys from time to time under his decree. He was not, however, subsequently to the decree, registered and treated as "a representative vatandar" under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 56. In 1875 plaintiff made a darkhast for the attachment of a certain amount belonging to the vatan for arrears due to him under his decree. The money was accordingly attached. Subsequently the Collector issued a certificate to the Subordinate Judge, who had attached it for the removal of the attachment under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 10. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered it to be removed, and his order was affirmed by the Assistant Judge on appeal. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a special appeal to the High Court. Held that the lower Courts had no option but to raise the attachment on receiving the Collector's certificate. Held also that, as the plaintiff having, according to law as it stood in 1863, succeeded in then establishing his right to be an hereditary deputy deshpande, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 56 of Bombay Act III of 1874. His status as hereditary deputy vatandar was a fact which neither a Revenue nor a Civil Court could properly ignore or re-open. It was res judicata. GOPAL HANMANT GUMASTE v. SAKHARAM GOVIND [I. ———————— s. 13—Hereditary service vatan—Office of kazi—Rozina allowance, its liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.—The office of kazi is not a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874. Plaintiff obtained a money-decree against H, and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by H against M, which entitled H to receive annually a certain portion of the rozina allowance paid by Government to M as kazi. H contended that the rozina allowance was paid to M and his family for service as kazi, and that therefore it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts. Held that, as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's rights to attach the decree obtained by H against M was not barred by s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. Held also that, as H was not liable to serve as kazi, it was not open to him to urge that the allowance in question was appropriated as service remuneration, and was not therefore transferable. Held also that, as the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) came into force, plaintiff's darkhast was not barred for want of a certificate under s. 4 of the Act. The dictum of the Lords of the Privy Council in The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, that the duty of European Judges administering the Hindu law is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is deducible from the earlist authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school governing the district concerned, and has there been sanctioned by usage, does not prohibit the Court from considering the question of fact whether a particular passage of the Kalika Purana upon which an argument in the Dattaka Mimansa is based is authentic by reference to other authoritative works of Hindu law. In that case no inflexible rule was laid down assigning supreme and infallible authority to the Dattaka Mimansa in questions connected with the law of adoption as followed by the Benares school of Hindu law. The authenticity of the text of the Kalika Purana, which lays down that a child must not be adopted whose age exceeds five years, is extremely doubtful. The interpretation given to that text in the Dattaka Mimansa was not necessarily intended to be universally applicable, and admits of a construction which would confine the application of the text to Brahmans intended for the priesthood; and various other equally plausible interpretations have been adopted by other authorities. This being so, it would be unsafe to act upon the text in question and upon the interpretation placed upon it in the Dattaka Mimansa so as to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid, and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate upon the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age. According to the Kalika Purana as interpreted by the Dattaka Mimansa of Nanda Pandita, an adoption in the Dattaka form is wholly null and void if made after the adoptee has completed the fifth year of his age. It is a mistake to hold that, according to the Dattaka Mimansa, so long as an adoption takes place while the adoptee is under six years of age, it is valid. The mistake arises from supposing that the word "panchvarshiya" used in paragraphs 48 and 53 of the Dattaka Mimansa necessarily indicates that the person referred to has passed the fifth anniversary of his birth. It indicates, on the contrary, that he is in his fifth year. Thakoor Oomrao Singh v. Thakooranee Mehtab Koonwer, 1 N. W., 103a, dissented from. GANGA SAHAI v. LEKHRAJ SINGH . I. L. The testator associated the other executors with his wife for the purpose of insuring a wise exercise of her discretion in the selection of a son for adoption, and not with the intention of making it an essential condition of adoption that they should take a part in the ceremony of adoption from which, under the Hindu law, they were precluded. Held also the power was given to the executors qua executors, and therefore survived to the holders for the time being of the office of executors; the death of one of them before the power was exercised did not therefore render the power void. The power was validly exercised by the wife adopting with the consent of the surviving executor. Held by the Privy Council:—That no one except the widow, authorized for the purpose by her husband, can adopt a son to him after his decease is a principle in the Hindu law of adoption. The power is exerciseable by the widow alone, though restriction may be placed upon her choice of a boy by the husband's having made it a condition that persons named by him should concur in the choice. Held therefore that by this will no valid authority to adopt was given to the widow. The conjecture that the testator really meant to give authority to the widow to adopt, restricting her power merely to the extent that there should be others, his executors, who were to consent to the choice of a boy to be adopted by her, could not be accepted as a legitimate construction of the will. The authority was expressed in clear terms to be to the three. It would also be beyond the range of judicial interpretation to construe the will as meaning that the testator only intended to provide for the appointment of a male successor to him in the property. 64. ——— Adoption during wife's pregnancy—Posthumous son, Rights of, in family property—Will limiting legal share of such son.—The adoption of a son by a childless Hindu is valid, although at the time of adoption his wife is pregnant. The possibility that a son may afterwards be born to him does not invalidate the adoption. A posthumous son takes the family property by right of survivorship, on the principle of relation back to the time of the father's death, which applies in the analogous case of inheritance and partition, and the rights of such a son stand on the same footing as those of a son in esse at the time of the father's death. A father therefore can no more interfere by his will with the right of a posthumous son to his share of the family property as fixed by law than with the right of a son in esse at the time of his death. An adopted son stands in the position of a natural son, subject to having his share reduced to one-fourth in the event of a natural son being subsequently born. R died, leaving him surviving his widow, who was then pregnant, and the defendant, whom he had adopted, a few days before his death. By his will R directed that, in the event of a son being born to him after his death, his property should be divided equally between such son and the defendant, but otherwise all his property was to go to the defendant. Shortly after R's death, a son (the plaintiff) was born. The present suit was brought by the guardian of the plaintiff to recover the family property from the defendant. It was contended that the adoption of the defendant was invalid, having taken place during the pregnancy of the plaintiff's mother, and that R's will, in so far as it was in prejudice of the plaintiff's right as a son, was also invalid. Held that the adoption of the defendant by R was valid, notwithstanding that R's wife was pregnant at the time of the adoption. Held also that R's will was inoperative in so far as it reduced the plaintiff's share to a moiety of the property. On the birth of the plaintiff, the defendant, as the adopted son, became by Hindu law entitled only to one-fourth, the plaintiff, as the natural son, taking the other three-fourths. Where a widow performs the principal part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance,—the fact that at her request the religious part of the ceremony is completed by a relation does not vitiate the adoption. In the case of a young widow, the fact that she was untonsured at the time of the adoption is not such a disqualification as vitiates the adoption. LAKSHMIBAI v. RAMCHANDRA . . . I. L. A younger widow cannot adopt without the consent of the elder. Held that the right of the elder widow was not merely a right of selection. Adoption, of course, implies selection of the child, but there is not complete adoption until the mutual acts of giving and receiving the child are accomplished, and until they take place, there is necessarily a locus penitentiæ for the elder widow of which she may avail herself, although contrary to the wishes of the other widows, by changing her mind and selecting another child. To hold that any one of the junior widows might perform the formal act of adoption of the selected child whenever it pleased her would be tantamount to enabling her to force the hand of the elder widow and compel her to complete the adoption which, at the most, was only in fieri. B died in 1865 without a son, leaving three widows, viz., L, A, and C, of whom L was the eldest and C the youngest. The plaintiff was unanimously selected by the three widows for adoption after the death of their husband. The unanimity continued down to May 1866; but on the 30th June 1866 L declared that, if the plaintiff were adopted by C, she would not consent to it. On the 1st July 1866, C adopted the plaintiff without the consent of L. On the 12th August 1869, L adopted the defendant. On the 10th August 1881, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant, alleging himself to be B's adopted son and as such claiming possession of B's property. He did not deny the factum of the defendant's alleged adoption on the 12th August 1869, which constituted (the plaintiff alleged) his cause of action. The defendant contended that he himself was the adopted son of B, having been adopted by L, the senior widow. He insisted that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid, having been carried out without the consent of L, the senior widow. He further contended that the plaintiff's claim to the property was barred by limitation, it having been in possession of himself (the defendant) and L for more than twelve years before this suit was filed. Held that the plaintiff was not the rightfully adopted son of B, and therefore was not entitled to the property in dispute. 89. ——— Adoption by a widow whose husband died while a minor—Implied authority from minor husband—Adoption from corrupt and improper motives—Onus of proof—Adoption in Gujarat—Kadva Kunbi caste, Adoption among—Custom as to adoption.—In the Maratha country a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband and without the consent of her kindred, adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper and bonâ fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. But the adoption must not have been expressly forbidden by the husband and must not have the effect of divesting an estate already vested in a third person. There is no reason for drawing any distinction, as regards the general law, between Gujarat and the Maratha country properly so called. Apart from local or caste custom, the general law in Gujarat must be taken to be as stated in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, 5 Bom., A. C., 181. A widow has implied authority from her husband to adopt, even though her husband be a minor. Where a widow adopts, there is a presumption that she has performed the duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive. A Hindu widow in Gujarat having adopted a son to her husband, who died before the completion of his sixteenth year, and who was separated from his brother,—Held that the adoption was valid. The authority of the husband to adopt may be implied, although he was a minor at the time of his death. If adoption by a widow be a meritorious act "beneficial to her husband's soul," assent should be implied in the case of a minor husband, as well as in the case of one who had attained his majority. A Hindu widow having adopted a son about eight years after her husband's death, during her last illness when she was confined to her bed,—Held that that circumstance alone did not afford any sufficient reason for supposing that she was not actuated by the sense of the duty she owed to her husband. The fact that the adoption was made on an inauspicious day showed the anxiety of the widow to adopt, but not the motive. PATEL VANDRAVAN JEKISAN v. PATEL MANILAL CHUNILAL

90. ——— Motives of widow in adopting—Adoption from corrupt motives—Presumption.—In Bombay, according to the authorities, if it can be predicated of an adoption by a widow (in a case where the consent of the husband's kinsmen is not required) that the ceremony has been performed, not as a religious duty, but from sinful and corrupt motives, it is on that account invalid, and the authorities appear to impose upon the Court the duty of inquiring into the motives of the adopting widow where her motives are called in question. Whether the presumption that an adopting widow has performed her duty from proper motives ought or ought not to be deemed an irrebuttable presumption, is a question which still remains to be judicially decided. The fact that the motives of the widow were of a mixed character is not sufficient to rebut the presumption—Patel Vandravan Jekisan v. Patel Manilal Chunilal, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 565. The fact that the widow has made terms for herself with the father of the boy to be adopted, or that she has solicited a boy whose father will be likely to accede to her wishes, is not sufficient to render the adoption invalid—Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar, I. L. R., 16 Calc., 556; Chitko Raghunath Rajadiksh v. Janaki, 11 Bom. H. C., 199. Where a widow had adopted a son, and it was found by the Courts that, unless she had been assured by the father and guardian of the adopted boy that she would receive R4,000, she would not have adopted him, but it was not found that she had not the special benefit of her husband in view when she made the adoption,—Held that the presumption that she made the adoption from motives of duty was not rebutted, and that presumption should be allowed to prevail. authority from her husband. It was decided that under all the circumstances under which this child had been applied for by the widow and given by the father, the assent of the latter was not one which had rendered the adoption valid as against the brothers. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the widow applied to the boy's father to give his assent as sapinda to an adoption, on the ground that she could not adopt without the sapinda's assent. It was not necessary to determine whether this sapinda could alone have given a valid assent, if it had been given to the widow as one having no authority from her husband to adopt; and if it had been given without his mind having been influenced by other and undue considerations. Where the husband of a Hindu widow dies separated, and she herself is the heir, or she and a junior co-widow are the heirs, she may adopt without the sanction of the husband (if he have not, expressly or by implication, indicated his desire that she shall not do so) and without the sanction of his kindred. N and J were two Hindu brothers undivided in estate. N died first, leaving a widow, K. J died next, leaving two sons and a widow, G (the defendant). K adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband and herself without the consent either of J's two sons or his widow, G. On the death of K and the two sons of J, the plaintiff sued G (the widow of J) for possession of the family estate. G claimed the estate as heir of her last surviving son, and, while admitting the fact of the plaintiff's adoption by K, denied its validity on the ground that the members of the family had given no assent to the adoption. It was admitted that K had not received from her husband N any permission or direction to adopt a son. Held that the plaintiff's adoption by K was invalid, inasmuch as she had not the authority of her husband or the consent of his undivided co-parceners to adopt, nor did she hold any estate in the property. It was found that Y had not the authority either of her husband or of her father-in-law, K, or of any of his co-parceners to adopt. Held that the adoption was not valid. Held further that a separated kinsman was not qualified to authorize the adoption. The fourth sapinda, who had refused his consent (apparently without giving reasons for such refusal), now impugned the adoption on the ground that the consent of all existing sapindas was necessary to render it valid, at all events when all stood in the same degree of relationship to the husband of the adopting widow, as was the case here. Held that the assent of every existing sapinda in such a case was not necessary, and that that of a majority would suffice. Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moore's I. A., 397, and Parasara Bhattar v. Rangaraja Bhattar, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 202, referred to and considered. An exception to this rule is where a co-widow adopts. Such an adoption will divest the younger widow of her estate. Another exception is where a daughter-in-law adopts with the authority of her father-in-law, who is head of the family, as in Vithoba v. Bapu, I. L. R., 15 Bom., 110. Unless prohibited expressly or by implication, a widow in the Presidency of Bombay has authority to adopt, but a daughter-in-law, i.e., the widow of a predeceased son, must be specially authorized by her father-in-law in order that she may make a valid adoption binding as against the heirs of her father-in-law. S was the widow of B, who died in 1877 in the lifetime of his father R. Fourteen years later, viz., in 1891, R died, leaving a widow Saibai, who succeeded to his estate as his heir. In March 1892 S adopted the plaintiff G as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. G sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of R as against the defendant V, who claimed to have been adopted by Saibai as son to R. Held (confirming the decree of the lower Court) that, as the adoption of the plaintiff G was made by S without proper authority and without Saibai's consent, it was inoperative and invalid. As Saibai did not give her consent to the plaintiff's adoption, that adoption did not divest her of her exclusive right to succeed as heir of R. 110. ———————— Adoption by widow of a predeceased son—Consent of mother-in-law—Rule that adoption must be by widow of the last full owner—Exceptions to this rule.—By Hindu law as settled by judicial decisions, it is only the widow of the last full owner who has the right to take a son in adoption to such owner, and a person in whom the estate does not vest cannot make a valid adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, of their proprietary rights. To this rule there are four exceptions: (1) In the case of co-widows. Though, on the death of the husband without male issue, the estate vests in all his widows, it has been held that the elder widow can, by adopting a son with the express or implied permission of her husband, divest the co-widow or widows of their vested rights. The consent of such younger widows has not been held to be essential. (2) In the case of a mother who succeeds as heir to an unmarried son, legitimate or adopted, who dies after his father. In such a case the right of the widow to take a son in adoption to her husband has been conceded to her, though such a son cannot properly be described as being the heir of the last full owner. (3) When an adoption takes place with the full assent of the party in whom the estate has vested by inheritance, the adoption is validated by such consent. (4) Where there has been ratification by conduct or acquiescence. Per PARSONS, J.—The mere fact that the adopting widow is not the widow of the last male holder would not make an adoption by her spiritually invalid, while any difficulty as to the inheritance and the estate is cured by the assent to the adoption given by the person in whom that inheritance or estate is vested. One B died in 1878, leaving a widow U and a daughter-in-law S him surviving. His only son D, the husband of S, had predeceased him. On B's death, his estate vested in his widow U. In 1879 S, with U's consent, adopted a son (defendant No. 3). The plaintiff in this suit sued to recover certain land which formed part of B's estate, alleging that it had been given to him by U. The first defendant alleged and proved that he had bought the land from the third defendant, who was the adopted son of S. Held (dismissing the suit) that the adoption was valid, and that the first defendant was entitled to the land. 224. ———— Succession—Sapinda relationship.—The rights of an adopted son, unless contracted by express texts, are in every respect similar to those of a natural-born son. An adopted son takes by inheritance from the relatives, on the maternal side, of his adoptive father in the same manner as a son begotten would take. 226. ———— Termination of authority to adopt—Succession of adopted son to collaterals in gotra not that of father by adoption.—An instrument of permission (anumati patra) to a Hindu wife to adopt should she be left a widow provided that "dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my sradh and that of our ancestors, and to succeed to the property." The husband and wife had a son born, who survived his father, succeeded to the property, and died before his mother, leaving a widow, who, as heir, took possession of it for her widow's estate. The mother then professed to exercise the above power, and in the suit arising thereupon—Bhoobunmoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry, 10 Moore's I. A., 279—it was decided that, the son's widow having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her. Held that, although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end; and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it. An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimansa, governing authorities in the Bengal school. An adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption. Sumbhoochunder Chowdhry v. Naraini Dibeh, 5 W. R., P. C., 100, referred to and followed. Held in this case that the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's, was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew. exception to this rule is where a co-widow adopts. Such an adoption will divest the younger widow of her estate. Another exception is where a daughter-in-law adopts with the authority of her father-in-law, who is head of the family, as in Vithoba v. Bapu, (1890) 15 Bom., 110. Unless prohibited expressly or by implication, a widow in the Presidency of Bombay has authority to adopt, but a daughter-in-law, i.e., the widow of a predeceased son, must be specially authorized by her father-in-law in order that she may make a valid adoption binding as against the heirs of her father-in-law. S was the widow of B, who died in 1877 in the lifetime of his father R. Fourteen years later, viz., in 1891, R died, leaving a widow Saibai, who succeeded to his estate as his heir. In March 1892, S adopted the plaintiff G, who was older than herself, as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of R as against the defendant V, who claimed to have been adopted by Saibai as son to R. The lower Appellate Court disallowed the plaintiff's adoption on the grounds that Saibai had not consented to it. Held (confirming the decree of the lower Court) that, as the adoption of plaintiff G was made by S without proper authority and without Saibai's consent, it was inoperative and invalid. But subsequently under an order of the Court T N L was made a co-defendant. The parties were subject to the Dayabhaga law, and the suit was for partition, the main question being as to the effect of the adoption upon the respective shares of the parties. Held that under the Dayabhaga law, when the property descends upon a male owner on the death of the last full owner, he takes therein a full and distinct interest, and in no circumstances is there any abeyance of the rights of property, nor can the property, when once vested, be divested; that therefore, although adoption prior to the vesting of the inheritance entails loss of the right of claiming any share in the estate of the adopted person's natural father or natural relation, yet the interest which is once vested in a son upon the death of his father is not divested by his subsequent adoption into another family; and the parties were accordingly entitled to one-fourth share during the lifetime of the widow and to one-third share absolutely upon her death. *Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. 9. EVIDENCE OF ADOPTION—continued.

261. ———— Adoption by dhurm-putr —Ceremony of dhurm-putr.—An adoption made by a Parsee immediately before his death would render extremely improbable the execution of a will by him a very short time previous thereto, and therefore call for very clear proof to establish its existence. Although in cases of adoption by dhurm-putr (a partial adoption) it is not indispensably necessary that a declaration should be made on the third day after the decease, yet it is usual to make such a declaration and to take a writing from the dhurm-putr. In the absence of any such writing, and upon the whole evidence, the adoption in this case was pronounced to be as a paluk-putr, and not merely as a dhurm-putr. HOMABHAEE v. PUNJEABHAEE DOSABHEEN [5 W. R., P. C., 102

262. ———— Requisition for validity of adoption—Registration—Acknowledgment in writing.—According to Hindu law, neither registration of the act of adoption nor any written evidence of that act having been completed is essential to its validity. In no case should the rights of wives and daughters be transferred to strangers or to more remote relations, unless the fact of adoption by which this transfer is effected be proved by evidence free from all suspicion of fraud, and so consistent and probable as to give no occasion for doubt of its truth. Although the Hindu law does not require that adoptions should be acknowledged in writing, it is usual, when persons in the situation of a zamindar adopt sons, to acknowledge such adoption in writing, to give notice to the ruling power, and to invite the neighbouring zamindars and others to be present at such an adoption. 263. ———— Deed expressing wish to adopt a particular person.—A cousin and heir to an insane proprietor having been sued for the amount of a decree, and application having been made for execution against the estate of the said proprietor after his death, it was urged that the estate had become the property of a minor who had been adopted by the insane proprietor previously to his decease, and could not be held liable for the debts of the cousin and heir, who, moreover, had formally relinquished his right to it. The plaintiff's claim rested on the contention that the formalities required to validate an adoption had not been attended to in this case. This contention was met by the plea that the adoption was complete, but that, even if it had not been so, a document declaring the deceased proprietor's desire to adopt the minor had the effect of a testament. Held by the High Court that, though the intention of the deceased proprietor to adopt the minor was clear, that intention, even as expressed in the above-mentioned document, which was not testamentary in character, did not amount to an adoption in the absence of the necessary formalities. The estate was accordingly declared liable for the amount of the decree against the cousin and heir. BANEE PERSHAD v. COURT OF WARDS . . . . 25 W. R., 192

264. ———— Evidence of conditional adoption.—In a suit in which a claim was made in virtue of an alleged adoption to the estate of a deceased Hindu, the widow made a compromise, not in writing, with the claimant where the adoption was admitted, but alleged to have been on condition that the widow should enjoy the entire property for her life without power of alienation, and that, after her death, her minor daughters should take the self-acquired property, and the claimant should succeed to the ancestral estate. Held that the evidence to establish such a conditional adoption must, as in the case of a nuncupative will, be very strong. IMRIT KONWAR v. ROOP NARAIN SINGH . 6 C. L. R., 76

265. ———— Deed purporting to make adoption—Giving and taking.—An ekrarnama executed by the natural father in favour of the adoptive father recited that the former had made over his third son to the sonship of the adoptive father, so that the latter might, whenever he would wish, fulfil the rights of adoption in accordance with the Shastras and the usage of the country, and from that day the natural father would have no claim or right in respect of the said son. Held that this deed did not of itself operate to effect an adoption. It did not even amount to a giving and taking of the boy, as it contemplated the subsequent performance of the necessary rites. Held, further, that deeds of this kind did not take the place of the necessary evidence as to the actual adoption. A., 250,* has no application to a case in which there is ample evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove the factum of adoption. Where it was sought to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate, on the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age, it was held that the onus of proof was upon the person who alleges the adoption to be invalid. Haimun Chull Singh v. Koomer Gunsheam Sing, 5 W. R., P. C., 69, referred to. In a case where the validity of an adoption was in dispute and the parties to the suit were Shatriyas,—Held that, even if it had been established that five years was the rigid and inflexible limit of age for the validity of all adoptions among the "twice-born" classes, so as to be applicable even to Shatriyas, in the circumstances of the case it would be necessary to have a full investigation of the question whether, among the clan of the Shatriyas to which the parties belonged, any such rigid rule prevailed. principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. There is no authority to show that it is to be applied to cases governed by the Hindu law in a manner exceeding the limits recognized by the Roman civil law in which it originated. Its application in cases of adoption should be confined to questions of formalities, ceremonies, preference in the matter of selection, and similar points of moral or religious significance, which relate to what may be termed the modus operandi of adoption, but do not affect its essence. There may be cases where matters which in other systems would be regarded as merely formal, are by the express letter of the texts made matters affecting the essence of the transaction, and such texts may be sufficiently imperative to vitiate an adoption in which they have been disregarded; but unless their meaning is undoubted, the doctrine of factum valet should be restricted to adoptions which, having been made in substantial conformity to the law, have infringed minor points of form or selection. Adoption under the Hindu law being in the nature of a gift, it contains three elements—capacity to give, capacity to take, and capacity to be the subject of adoption—which are essential to the validity of the transactions, and as such are beyond the scope of the doctrine of factum valet. Uma Deyi v. *Gokoolanund Das Mahapatra, L. The rule of factum valet applies in cases of adoption only where "there is neither want of authority to give or to accept, nor imperative interdiction of adoption." PADAJIRAV v. RAMRAV . I. L. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the price received by the father became a part of the assets of the joint family; and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase, he must do equity and offer to repay the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of such purchase-money or the produce of it has ever come to his hands. 47. ——— Necessity—Minor sons—Debt contracted to enable father to earn a maintenance.—The expression "family necessity," justifying the sale of ancestral property, must be construed reasonably, and the head of the family and those dealing with him must be supported in transactions which, though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent or tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude must be allowed for the exercise of a manager's judgment, especially in the case of a father, though this must not be extended so far as to free the persons dealing with him from the need of all precautions where a minor son has an interest in the property. The fact that a mortgage or a bond, to pay off which ancestral property is sold, had some time to run is not a sufficient reason to disprove an otherwise apparent family necessity. The Hindu law recognizes a debt contracted by the father of a family to enable him to earn a maintenance as one contracted under pressure of a family necessity. But,—Held on appeal to the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the High Court, that the estate which a son takes by heritage from his father constitutes assets by descent for the payment of his father's debt not incurred for any immoral or vicious purpose. This estate may be attached and sold in execution of a decree upon such a debt, and that it is an impartible zamindari does not alter the case. The principle that the ancestral property, in which the son acquires an interest by birth, is liable for the father's debt, unless within the above exception, holds good by the Mitakshara law as administered in Madras as well as in Bombay and Bengal. Gridhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187: L. R., 1 I. A., 321, referred to and followed. Part of an impartible zamindari inherited from a maternal grandfather was hypothecated by the zamindar as security for a debt not within the above exception. Held that all the right, title, and interest which had come to his son by heritage from the indebted zamindar, as well in the hypothecated part as in the rest of the zamindari, were liable, so far as they had not been administered in payment of the father's debt, to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, based on his admission of the debt. 49. ——— Ancestral property—Son's share—Rights of co-parceners—Purchaser, Right of.—Under the law of the Mitakshara, each son upon his birth takes a share equal to that of his father in ancestral immoveable estate, and can compel his father to make partition of such estate. The rights of the co-parceners in a joint Hindu family consisting of a father and his sons do not differ from those of the co-parceners in a like family consisting of undivided brethren, except in so far as the sons are affected by the obligation of the Hindu law to pay their father's debts, and by the fact that he is naturally the manager of the joint family estate. It is settled law in the Madras Presidency that one co-parcener may dispose of ancestral undivided estate to the extent of his own share, even by private conveyance, whether for value or by gift. In the Bombay Presidency, unauthorized alienations, voluntarily made by one co-parcener, are good, even for his own share, only when made for value. In Bengal, the law which prevails in the other Presidencies as to alienation by private deed has not yet been adopted, but it is now settled that the purchaser of undivided property, sold in execution of a decree during the life of the debtor for his separate debt, acquires the debtor's interest in such property, with the power of ascertaining and realizing it by partition. Under the Hindu law, subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father. Accordingly, where ancestral property has passed out of the family either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were of a kind for which they would not have been liable, and that the purchasers had notice to that effect; and a purchaser at an execution-sale, being a stranger to the suit without such notice, is not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the surface of the proceedings. In a suit by the members of an undivided Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara to set aside a sale of joint ancestral property which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against their deceased father, on the ground that the debt was not one for which such property could be made liable, it appeared that prior to the sale the plaintiffs had preferred a claim of objection thereto on the same grounds, and that the Court of execution had declined to adjudicate the claim, and had

55. ——————— Mitakshara law—Ancestral property—Sale of joint family property—Debts legally contracted by father—Sale in execution of decree.—There is no foundation either in the Mitakshara law itself or in any decisions passed by the Judicial Committee for the broad proposition that in all cases under a sale in execution of a money-decree against the father in a joint family, consisting of a father and sons, whether adults or minors, nothing but the father's share passes. The result of an examination of the leading cases on the subject is, that in each such case the question as to what was sold in execution must be first determined (the mere circumstance that a decree was obtained against the father alone is not conclusive upon the point); and it should further be enquired whether the father was sued in his representative capacity or not, and if not so sued, then whether the sons are entitled to set aside the sale qua their shares. The father, becoming insolvent, took the benefit of the Insolvent Act; and the usual vesting order, under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act, 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21, was thereupon made. Shortly afterwards the father died, and soon after his death the Official Assignee sold the houses in question to the defendant in order to raise money to pay off the deceased insolvent's debts. The son now brought a suit to recover the whole or a portion of the said houses, contesting the right of the Official Assignee to convey any interest, or at least his interest in the said houses, to the purchaser. Held that the sale was valid, and conveyed to the purchaser the interest of the plaintiff as well as that of his deceased father. Under the Mitakshara law, a father has the right to dispose of his son's interest in ancestral immoveable estate for the payment of his own debts not contracted for immoral purposes; and a vesting order made under s. 7 of the Insolvent Act vests that right in the Official Assignee, who can therefore give a good and complete title to such ancestral immoveable estate to a purchaser. The death of the insolvent had no effect on the proceedings in his insolvency or on the power of the Official Assignee. The ancestral estate previously vested in the Official Assignee was not therefore divested from him, and vested in the son by right of survivorship. Semble—In the event of the father's estate producing a surplus over and above the amount required to satisfy his debts, such surplus might be made available to answer the claims of the son in respect of his interest in ancestral immoveable property sold in the realization of the father's estate. before Girdharee Lall's case in which the son's obligation was not treated as a mere moral duty But, granting that the judgment may be enforced as a legal obligation, it would be a good defence under the ancient Hindu law for the son to plead that the obligation could not arise in his father's lifetime to pay a debt contracted by the father for his own purposes The decision in Girdharee Lall's case ought not to be followed in this Presidency—(1) because of the peculiar view which has prevailed, as to the nature of the pious obligation, for more than forty years, (2) because of the doctrine of alienability of undivided interest which has been generally recognized as a matter of equity for more than sixty years, and as a matter of right for upwards of twenty years, (3) because the son's right of interdiction and power to defraud creditors, provided by the Mitakshara, have been taken away by recognizing that an undivided interest is on the footing of the co-parcener's separate property for the

against a Hindu father by his creditors, there is nothing special to warrant a fictitious extension of the parties There is no legal basis for any distinction between a decree in which there is a direction for the sale of mortgaged property and a simple money decree. The interest that passes by a Court sale must be determined with reference to the decree that led to it, and cannot be determined by a future inquiry as to the character of the debt. The son's interest does not pass by reason of the direction for the sale of the mortgaged property. Per KERNAN, J—A sale or mortgage by a father alone of ancestral property, after the birth of a son, for the purpose of raising money, not for family necessity or benefit, but to pay a debt incurred by the father, not for immoral consideration, binds the son and his interest at birth, and from this it necessarily follows that the obligation of the son arises and may be made effectual against the son in the lifetime of the father. Per KINDERSLEY, J.—The obligation of the son to pay his father's debt is a part of the law of inheritance, not of contract. According to the true doctrine of the Hindu law, the obligation of the son to pay his father's debt does not arise until the father's death. It is the duty of the father to pay his own separate debts, but the decision in Girdharee Lall's case goes further, and rules that even in the undivided father's lifetime, when there has been

66 ———— Sale of family property by father—Right of son to set aside sale—In the Madras Presidency a sale of ancestral land by an undivided Hindu father to procure funds for the satisfaction of debts incurred by himself must be sustained as against the sons on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R, 187, but when the sale is also disputed by a (minor) co-parcener not a son, but a nephew (the sale-deed having been executed by his uncle and his mother as de facto guardians), the ruling in Girdharee Lall's case is not applicable, and the purchaser must show, in addition to the fact that the debts existed at the time of the sale, that the debts were such as it was incumbent on the minor to discharge GANGULU v ANCHA BAPULU . I. L. R., 4 Mad., 73

Deendyal Lall's case, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 198, or by the Subordinate Judge, who held, on the authority of Girdharee Lall's case, 14 B. L. R., 187, that the plaintiff's claim against P was invalid, considering the decree against the father sufficient evidence of the debt. R also borrowed R450 from A, and in 1872 executed a mortgage-bond hypothecating other family lands to him as security. In 1876 A brought a suit (No. 35) against R to recover the amount due on the bond from R personally and by sale of the mortgaged land, and in 1877 the mortgaged lands were sold in execution of the decree and a certificate issued, in the same form as in P's suit, to A. A also intervened in the partition suit, and was made a party. The amount due by R to A, secured by the mortgage, was not disputed, nor was it alleged that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes. The lower Courts decided the plaintiff's claim against A in the same way as his claim against P. Held (INNES and MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, JJ., dissenting) that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R., 187, is binding on and must be followed by the Courts in this Presidency, and that the liability of a son to discharge his father's debts is commensurate with the whole interest the son takes in the ancestral as well as in the self-acquired property of his father. Held also that it was necessary to determine whether the amount alleged by P remained due on the bond of 1876, because, if it was established by the plaintiff that the debt was substantially less than it was asserted to be, the plaintiff might have a claim to equitable relief, inasmuch as the decree-holder brought the land to sale after the institution of the partition suit. Held, lastly, that if the sale to A was made in execution of so much of the decree as was purely personal, the plaintiff's claim was properly dismissed as against A, but if the sale was made in execution of the order for the enforcement of the mortgage, it could not bind the plaintiff, inasmuch as it was the duty of the mortgagee to make plaintiff a party to suit No. 35 and afford him an opportunity of redemption, but that, if the sale was set aside, the plaintiff could not claim to be placed in a better position than he would have occupied had the sale not taken place, and that, as his interest was bound by the mortgage, he would hold that interest subject to a proportionate part of the mortgage-debt. Per TURNER, C.J.—The obligation under the ancient Hindu law of the son and grandson to discharge the debt of the father and grandfather has been preserved, while the power of the father to deal with ancestral immoveable property has been curtailed. A personal obligation arising from the filial relation and independent of assets exists as well as an obligation attaching to the heritage in the hands of lineal descendants of the debtor. The question as to the extent of the son's liability is not one of contract, but the duty is an incident of inheritance. Assets available for the payment of a father's debts mean and include the whole estate in which the son by birth acquired rights. The validity of an alienation to a purchaser for consideration in Bombay, as in Madras, did not originate in any local usage, but in an exceptional doctrine established by modern jurisprudence. The duty of the son is incidental to the heritage and subsists from the inception of the son's interest therein. As a father can make a valid alienation of ancestral property so as to bind the son's interest, the law will execute the father's power for the benefit of creditors. There are substantial differences between a sale in execution for a money decree and a sale under a decree ordering a sale to enforce a mortgage. In the former case the Court proposes to sell whatever interest in the property would, under any circumstances, be available to creditors at the date of the attachment; in the latter case, whatever interest the mortgagor was, under any circumstances, competent to create and intended to create at the time of the mortgage. Although a son's interest may pass by a sale in execution of a decree in a suit to which he was no party, yet the son is not concluded by the decree. It is competent to him to contest the sale in subsequent proceedings on any grounds which, had he been a party, he might have advanced to protect his interest. Per INNES, J.—The question of the extent of the liability of the son is a question of contract and not a question of succession, and to be determined not by Hindu law, but by the statute law or the law of equity and good conscience. Since 1837 the decisions in Madras have determined that the liability of the son exists only to the extent he may have taken assets. According to the Mitakshara, the son has property by birth in the estate of his grandfather, and since 1813 the right to alienate his share without the consent of his co-parceners has been established. The father cannot leave assets in the property of his son. The share of the father in ancestral estate does not accrue to the son by survivorship instead of becoming available as assets, because of the rule of Hindu law which requires the taker of wealth, whether by survivorship or inheritance, to discharge the debts. The decision in Girdharee Lall's case cannot alter the law as to rights in property so as to make the son's interest the father's estate. Until the decision in Girdharee Lall's case, the son's freedom from liability to pay the father's personal debt in the father's lifetime was universally supposed to exist, and that decision ought not to be followed in the Madras Presidency so far as it lays upon the son the duty of discharging his father's debt in his lifetime, or so far as it limits the son's right to question charges made by the father upon the family property to the case of debts immorally contracted. The rules laid down in Saravana Tevan v. Muttayi Ammal, 6 Mad., 371, should be followed, and when a decree is against the father for his separate debts, the purchaser of ancestral property under the decree takes at most only the share or interest to which the father was entitled at the date at which the charge was created. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The power of a Hindu father to sell ancestral lands is limited. The rights of co-parceners in an undivided Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, which consists of a father and sons, do not differ from those of co-parceners in a family which consists of undivided brothers, except so far as they are affected by the peculiar obligation which the Hindu law imposes

80. ———————— Sale or mortgage of joint family property—Suit by son to recover possession of share—Limitation—Parties—Right of purchaser at execution-sale.—A suit by a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of property sold during his minority by his father, is within time if brought within three years after he attains the age of twenty-one. A father governed by the Mitakshara law may alienate the family property to discharge debts incurred by him for purposes not illegal or immoral. If the son seeks to set aside such alienation as to his own interest, he will have to show that the purposes of the alienation were illegal or immoral. If the son, being adult, has joined in the conveyance or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity. These propositions apply to a mortgage, so as to place the purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree upon a mortgage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale. If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is concluded; but if he has not been a party to the suit, he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser. Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son as well as the father must be a party to the suit. When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title, and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest. In execution of two money-decrees against A alone, the right, title, and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchasers. 87. ———————— Sale of ancestral property by father for debts incurred for immoral purposes—Son's interest in ancestral estate.—The plaintiffs (two of whom were minors) sued to set aside the sale and recover possession of certain ancestral lands on the ground that they had been sold by their father to pay off debts contracted for immoral purposes. The documentary evidence in the case showed that the lands had been originally mortgaged by the grandfather and father of the plaintiffs to the father of the defendant for R1,600; that they had subsequently taken from him other loans which, together with the mortgage-debt, amounted to R4,400-15-0; that on the 23rd May 1858 an agreement (exhibit No. 38) was made between the plaintiffs' father and the father of the defendant by which the former was to sell the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to the latter in consideration of the latter realizing the former from the said debt of R4,400-15-0 and paying him the sum of R235; that accordingly on the 25th May 1858 the plaintiff's father conveyed the property to the defendant's father for R235 by a deed of sale (exhibit 17), which, however, did not refer either to the agreement (exhibit 38) or to the debts for R4,400-15-0. There was no allegation or evidence in the case showing that the plaintiffs' grandfather had contracted the debt of R4,400-15-0 for any immoral purposes, nor that their father applied the sum of R235 to the payment of debts incurred for immoral purposes, although it was in evidence that he drank to excess. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding, inter alia, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the property to have been sold by their father for debts incurred for excessive drinking. One of the issues raised by the Assistant Judge in appeal was whether there was any necessity for the sale of the property by the plaintiffs' father. He found this issue in the negative, and held the sale invalid, except as to the plaintiffs' father's own share. On special appeal to the High Court,—Held that, on the above facts, the plaintiffs had failed to establish any case entitling them to set aside the sale of the lands by their father. Held also that it ought to have been ascertained whether the minor plaintiffs were born before the date of the sale,—viz., 25th May 1858,—because if they had not been born before that date, their suit would have been unsustainable, as they never could have had any interest in the property. Quære—Even supposing that the plaintiffs' father had applied the sum of R235 to the payment of debts incurred for the immoral purpose of excessive drinking, whether the trivial amount would have justified the setting aside of the sale of the 25th May 1858, the main consideration for which was the release of the pre-existing debts for R4,400-15-0. 88. ———————— Alienation of ancestral property by father—Son's interest in ancestral estate—Debt incurred for immoral or illegal purposes.—Subject to certain limited exceptions (as, for instance, debts contracted for immoral or illegal purposes), the whole of the estate of a Hindu undivided family is, in the hands of sons or grandsons, liable to the debts of the father or grandfather. In 1865 certain lands, the ancestral property of D, were sold under a decree passed against D, and were bought by J. These lands had been mortgaged in 1863 by D to N, in which transaction D had been principal and J his surety. In 1866, N sued on his mortgage, and on the 21st January 1868 a decree was made, directing the sale of the lands. Under that decree, the right, title, and interest of J were sold on the 1st April 1869 to C, and C afterwards sold the lands to M. In the present suit the plaintiffs (D's sons) sued D and M for possession of their two-thirds shares, alleging that the land was ancestral, and that the whole of it had been illegally sold under the decree of the 21st January 1868. Both the lower Courts held that the land was ancestral; that the plaintiffs were united in interest with their father D when the mortgage-debt was contracted by the latter; that the burden lay upon them (plaintiffs) to prove that the debt had been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, and they failed to discharge it; that they were therefore bound by the sale. The lower Courts accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. On second appeal, the High Court affirmed the decrees of the Courts below on the grounds mentioned above. The execution sale took place in July 1877, and the plaintiff (the mortgagee's son) became the purchaser of the house. On attempting to take possession, he was resisted by the defendants (sons of the mortgagor), who alleged the house to be ancestral property, and denied the plaintiff's right to more than the third share to which the father had been entitled. Held by the High Court on appeal, upon the authority of Gridhareelall v. *Kantoo Lall, 14 B. His son was of age at the time of the mortgage, but the mortgagee did not make the son join in the mortgage. When the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage, he brought it against the father alone; and he obtained a decree against the father alone for the sale of the property. On the property being attached in execution of the decree, the son objected to the sale of the property, so far as his own share according to Hindu law was concerned. This objection having been disallowed, he sued the mortgagee for a declaration that such share was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree, claiming on the ground that he was not bound by the mortgage or the decree, not having joined in the mortgage or been a party to the suit in which the decree was made, and that the debt secured by the mortgage had been incurred by his father for immoral purposes. Held that the son was not entitled to succeed in such suit merely because, although he was of age, he was not required by the mortgagee to join in the mortgage, and was not made a party to the suit to enforce the mortgage; but that he was in the same position as he would have been had he been a minor at the time the mortgage was made and the decree was passed, and was therefore only entitled to succeed if he showed that the debt incurred by his father was incurred for immoral purposes of his own. Held further that, inasmuch as the debt in question was incurred for necessary purposes, and as the son was aware of the mortgage and did not protest against it, but on the contrary stood by and benefited thereby, and as he was aware of the suit and did not apply to be made a party thereto, he was asking too late for the relief which he sought. Ram Narain Lall v. *Bhawani Prasad, I. 110. ——— Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Suit to enforce the mortgage against sons' shares—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a decree is obtained against the father and a sale effected, the presumption is that the decree was properly made. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father, and in which family property was hypothecated, no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. 111. ——— Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family under the Mitakshara cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale, notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. 112. ——— Joint family—Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interset and costs.—The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that under the decree passed against the father the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable, just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable, although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. Pensions Act, Certificate of Collector under.—The power of the father, as representative of the family, to bind the son's interests in the family estate, except in special cases, being judicially recognized, the onus of establishing the existence of those special circumstances necessarily lies on the sons for the purpose of defeating his creditor's remedies against the ancestral estate. The plaintiff sued to recover the balance of a debt due on a mortgage-bond alleged to have been executed in 1878 by the defendant's father (since deceased) to the plaintiff's father. The defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the loan was contracted without his knowledge and for immoral purposes, and that his share in the mortgaged property was not answerable for the debt. He also contended, as to a sum of R109-8-0 claimed by the plaintiff, that this sum was claimed in respect of saranjam, and was not recoverable by the plaintiff without a certificate under the Pensions Act. The lower Court found that the defendant's father had been a man of extravagant and vicious habits, but held that the defendant had failed to prove that the debt in question had been contracted for immoral purposes. The Judge therefore awarded the plaintiff's claim. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court,—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the burden lay on the defendant of proving that the loan to the father secured by the mortgage-bond in the suit was for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that the defendant had not discharged this burden. The mere proof that his father had been a man of extravagant and immoral habits was not enough. Held also that, as no certificate from the Collector had been produced, as required by the Pensions Act, the claim to R109-8-0 should be disallowed. On their suing for an injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree, on the ground that it was not binding on them,—Held that the question how far the sons are bound by a decree against the father must be decided with reference to the particular facts of each case. If the father is manager and the question in issue is one which equally affects him and the other members of the family, and if the suit is properly defended, the adjudication will bind all the persons interested with the father, since in that case it will be presumed that the father represents their interests. The sons will still more clearly be bound if, being of full age, and knowing of the litigation, they acquiesce in the conduct of it by the father. KUNJAN CHETTI v. SIDDA PILLAI . . I. L. purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage On the 26th June 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had, on the 8th November 1880, mortgaged property in the hands of S It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid, that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity, and that L was the benamidar of S It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of R, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage-lien was res judicata as against him It was also contended that the five mouzahs should not be saddled with the whole of the mortgage debt, but that the mouzah in the hands of M should bear its proportionate part thereof. Held that, though B purported to execute the mortgage as guardian for D, though D was not the adopted son of A, the substance of the transaction of R, the next reversioner, it really created a valid charge upon the property, and that the mouzah in the hands of M must bear its share of the mortgage debt, and that the decree of the lower Court was

154. ———— Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations—Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow.—The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income, making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investment, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the primâ facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that during the life of his minor son she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity, and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. 167. ———— Adopted son's right to impeach alienation unnecessarily made by his adoptive mother before his adoption—Widow, Alienation by—Alienee from widow bound to inquire if legal necessity for alienation—Evidence—Onus of proving necessity for alienation by the widow.—The plaintiff claimed, as the adopted son of one K, to recover possession of his adoptive father's property, which had been mortgaged by his (K's) widow, R (defendant No. 1), to the third defendant, B, prior to the plaintiff's adoption by her. The property had come into R's possession incumbered with a mortgage effected by her husband, and, in order to redeem that mortgage, she mortgaged the property again to one Y. She subsequently paid off Y's debt, amounting to R3,629, and in 1876 she mortgaged the property for R5,999 to B, who was put into possession. In 1881 she adopted the plaintiff, and in 1882 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover the property. He contended that R had no power to alienate or mortgage the ancestral immoveable property of her deceased husband, and he claimed, as the adopted son of K, to be entitled to the property free from the mortgages or other incumbrances with which R had attempted to charge it. For the defendants it was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff could not impeach transactions effected by his adoptive mother prior to his adoption. Held that the plaintiff, as the adopted son of K, had a right to impeach the unauthorized transactions of his adoptive mother R, who possessed only a widow's restricted power of alienation. The plaintiff was adopted by R to her husband, who was the last owner of the ancestral property. The plaintiff at once succeeded to that property upon his adoption, and as heir of his adoptive father was entitled to object to any alienation made by R, on the principle that the restrictions upon a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of such amount only as was raised by R for the purpose of meeting expenses necessarily incurred by her. Held, further, that the onus of proving the necessity for alienation lay upon B. The Court found that there was no evidence that any sum beyond R3,629, the amount of Y's mortgage, was really required by R, and accordingly directed that the mortgage account should be taken between the plaintiff and B on the footing that the principal of the mortgage-debt was R3,629 only, instead of R5,999. The plaintiff's agent had received rents to a certain amount from part of the estate. Held that the plaintiff ought to have taken care that this sum was applied in part reduction of the debt to him, and that it must be deducted from the amount chargeable to the estate in the hands of the reversionary heir. Hunooman Pershad Panday v. *Munraj Koonweree, 6 Moore's I. In a suit upon a mortgage of such property executed under the authority of a widow borrowing money, the point whether the loan was necessary was expressed in the issues in the form of a question how far the defendants' objections, grounded on the absence of necessity, were tenable. This was obviously an incorrect mode of trying the suit, because it assumed that it was for the defendants to show absence of necessity, and did not accord with the obligation upon a mortgagee, claiming under a widow, to prove a valid mortgage. It was sufficient to defeat the suit that upon the whole case there had been no proof of the lenders having fulfilled the legal obligation to inquire and satisfy himself that the widow, from whom he was taking a charge upon her husband's inheritance, had a proper justification for so charging it. Hanooman Persaud v. *Munraj Koonweree, 6 Moore's I. The principle is that the lender, although he is not bound to see to the application of the money, and does not loose his rights if, upon bonâ fide inquiry, he has been deceived as to the existence of the necessity which he had reasonable grounds for supposing to exist, still is under an obligation to do certain things. The estate was situate in a district in the Presidency of Bombay subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The plaintiff as reversioner sued for a declaration that the sale was void beyond the lifetime of the widow. Both the lower Courts made the declaration prayed for by the plaintiff, on the ground that there was no necessity for the sale, as the widow might have availed herself of the provisions of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. On appeal by the defendant to the High Court,—Held, reversing the lower Courts' decree, that the sale by the widow should be upheld. She was not bound to avail herself of the relief afforded by the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act any more than of the provisions of the Limitation Act. 220. ——————— Expenses of litigation—Fraudulent assignment—Suit to declare deed binding on reversioners.—A Hindu, R C, died possessed of considerable property, and leaving five sons. One of them died leaving a widow B. She brought a suit to recover her husband's share in R C's estate, together with the profits thereon. The suit was conducted by G R. A large amount became due to him for costs. To secure this, B executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment. The suit failed. In order to obtain the means of bringing another suit, B, by deed dated 4th April 1859, assigned her interest in the estate in the right of her husband, and all benefit to be derived from the suit to be instituted, to G —one-half absolutely, the other in trust to retain thereout what he might advance to her for maintenance and for the costs of suit with interest at 12 per cent. and to pay her the residue. In November 1859, G by deed sub-assigned to H S, in consideration that H S should undertake the maintenance of B and the management of the suit, retaining only five-sixteenths out of the eight-sixteenths assigned to him (G) absolutely. On 19th August 1861, B obtained a decree in the Supreme Court declaring her entitled to the accumulations on her husband's one-fifth share in the estate of his father R C, and to all profits made on such accumulations since her husband's death. In September 1861, G R caused judgment to be entered on the bond and execution to be issued, and the sheriff seized and was about to sell B's interest in the estate of her husband. Thereupon, B being entirely without means, P S, brother of H S, paid off G R, and in consideration thereof took an assignment by deed, dated 18th December 1861, in the name of one I S, from B, of five-eighths of the half share reserved to her by the deed of 4th April 1859, but subject to the assignment by that deed to G. On 20th December 1869, R84,685 were paid into Court as B's husband's share of the accumulations on R C's property at the date of his death, and R1,55,255 as the profits made thereon since her husband's death. P S now sued for a declaration that the deed of 18th December 1861 was binding upon B and the reversionary heirs, and for an order that the precise amount due to him be ascertained and paid to him out of the moneys paid into Court. At the trial he abandoned his claim against the R84,685 on the ground that he could not prove legal necessity on the part of B. Held the deed could be supported only so far as it charged the profits made since R C's death with the repayment of the R12,500 advanced, with interest at 12 per cent. P S was entitled to have that amount paid out of the R1,55,255 in Court. This suit was dismissed. R subsequently transferred her deceased husband's estate to his daughter I. L sued R and I to enforce the mortgage made to him by R by cancelment of such transfer. Held that the mere fact that the mortgaged property had been transferred to I did not preclude her from contending, as next reversioner, that the mortgage of such property by R was void for want of "legal necessity;" that under the circumstances stated above there was not any "legal necessity," within the meaning of the Hindu law, for such mortgage, and such suit not having been for the benefit of the estate of R's deceased husband, consequently such mortgage was not valid so far as the reversionary right of I was concerned; that, however, I's right to the mortgaged property as transferee from R was subject to such mortgage. After the death of the widow of one of the brothers, J D, the widow of another brother, brought a suit for partition; but subsequently, by the consent of all parties, the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, and an award was made as follows: "Selling their (the widows') respective raiyati land, bati, or house, they will pay the costs of their respective vakeels; in that way the land, bati, or house that shall remain, with the proceeds belonging to their respective shares, the raiment and food of C D (the widow of another brother) and J D will be supplied during their lives; they will be unable to make a gift, sale, etc.; should the proceeds of the land, bati, or house not be sufficient for their food and raiment and for the purity of their respective husbands in a suitable manner, the jetta dharma, then showing good reason, regulation, conformably to the dharma shastra what is expedient as necessary according to usage, informing the other shareholders, they shall be able to sell the raiyati land, bati, or house of their respective shares." This award, which directed a partition according to the terms of a chinitnamah, or written description of the land, which was executed by all the parties, was made a rule of Court on 26th July 1858. J D took possession of her husband's share of the estate, some portion of which she alienated. In a suit brought by the reversionary heirs against J D and the purchasers of what she had sold, it was alleged that the alienations were without necessity and contrary to the award, and it was prayed that they might be declared void as against the reversionary heirs, and that J D might be restrained from further alienations. Held that the suit could be maintained in the lifetime of J D. 8. ——— Custom not allowing adoption, governing a family not subject to Hindu law—Construction of gift—Burden of proof—Inheritance.—A family in Bengal, affecting to be Hindu, but not Hindu by descent and origin, may be governed by customs at variance with Hindu law. A family took its origin in a tribe not Hindu, and its customs differed from Hindu customs. The question having arisen whether succession in virtue of adoption was consistent with, or was contrary to, the customs of the family, Held first that, with regard to the origin and history of the family, the point for inquiry was not whether the general Hindu law was in this case modified by a family custom forbidding adoption, but was whether, with respect to inheritance, the family was governed by Hindu law or by customs not allowing an adopted son to inherit; secondly, upon the evdence that this family had retained, and was governed by, customs at variance with Hindu law, and that, whatever Hindu customs might have been introduced into it, the custom of succession upon adoption had not. Whether, if the family had been shown to be Hindu out and out, save only special customs, the evidence would have been sufficient to prove a special custom was not the question. Held also in reference to the burden of proof that, in a suit brought to maintain the plaintiff's title as heir against a defendant, who relied upon an adoption as defeating the title of the plaintiff, the burden of proving the adoption to be permitted by the family custom was upon those who alleged it to be so; whereas, if the family had been generally governed by Hindu law, the onus would have been on those who alleged the exclusion of the right to adopt. Rajah Bishnath Singh v. *Ram Churn Majmoadar, S. The Court refused to allow such evidence to be called, holding that it would merely prove what the Court, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, would assume to be the case, viz., that the widows of the caste usually or invariably followed the dictates of the Hindu ceremonial or religious law, which ordains that widows shall shave their heads, and that it would prove nothing more; and with regard to the opinion of the caste, that such opinion, even if expressed by a majority at a caste meeting, as it would not of course be binding upon the Court, ought not to affect its judgment. 29. ——— Usages among dancing girls (naikins)—Usage as a source of law—Functions of Courts of law and of the Legislature in giving effect to usage—Judicial decisions giving effect to usage—Although the Courts in India are bound by charter to recognize the "usages of the Gentus," they are not limited to the sole sense of the word "usage" which shuts out all amelioration. The practices of an abandoned class are, no doubt, a usage in the sense of a tolerably uniform series of acts, but they do not therefore spring from a consciousness of compulsion, but rather from mere habit, imitation, and ignorance. Such usage is not a law, for over it

presides the higher usage of the community at large from whose approval it must have derived any conceivable original validity, and in opposition to which it cannot subsist, and as the community comes to recognize certain principles as essential to the common welfare, it will no longer lend its sanction to sectional practices at variance with the principles thus recognized. It is only according to the standards of the Hindu law that a usage has coercive force amongst Hindus, and what the Hindu law is, must, for the purposes of secular justice, depend on the general sense of the Hindu community. Although at one time in India the existence of companies of temple to a life of infamy The whole constitution of the class of courtesans would, it is certain, be now regarded by the great mass of the Hindu community as

become a customary law. A custom, in order not to constitute it such, but to give it coercive effect in particular instances, needs the sanction of the sovereign power waiting on the judgment of a Court. It is the function of a Judge, as a witness and as an expositor, to give a clear definition of the custom, usage, or rule as to which the opinion of the community has arrived at the requisite degree of maturity It is the function of the State to enforce it when it is ascertained and pronounced upon by the Courts of law Judicial decisions by which customs usage, as such, to which the Courts are commanded to give effect. A custom, however, may be adopted and abandoned and its recognition at a particular stage, by the Courts, as a usage cannot prevent this action of the class or community If the usage is variable at the will of the community, it must be enforced in its slowly changing phases, or else the behest of the sovereign will eventually be defeated. As the mind of the community becomes enlightened, its legal convictions will change, and this will constitute a change in its common law, as that law must from time to time be recognized and recorded in the Courts. The custom and practice in such matters is to be proved by testimony. A zamindar claiming a customary right to grant confirmation of the election of a mohunt must prove the custom; an acknowledgment, taken in troubled times from the guardian of an infant mohunt, of a zamindar's customary right to control and remove the mohunt, is entitled to little, if any, weight as evidence of the custom. The transferor had besides a son numerous dayadis, and some of the latter now sued for a declaration that the gift was not binding on them. The law of succession admittedly applicable to this palayam was the rule of dayadi pattam, according to which the person entitled to succeed on the death of a palayagar is the senior in age of his dayadis, descended from one of three brothers who originally formed a joint family together and were the founders of three lines in the family. The person entitled under this rule to inherit on the death of the transferor was one of the plaintiffs in the suit. It was contended that the palayagar had no proprietary right in the estate, but held the office of manager merely; but this contention was overruled. It was further contended that the estate admittedly impartible was by custom inalienable also. Held on the oral and other evidence adduced in the case, and with reference to admissions made by the transferor and to his conduct, and on its appearing that eight out of the nine predecessors of the transferor had left either sons or widows, but nevertheless that for three centuries there had been no sale or gift, that the custom of inalienability was established, and that the gift in question was accordingly invalid as against the plaintiffs. Sartaj Kuari v. *Deoraj Kuari, I. And held that, inasmuch as here there was no co-parcenary subsisting between the zamindar and any member of his family in the estate, the zamindar had power to alienate it, and that he might exercise that power by will. The second of a joint family of three sons now sued the elder, the youngest being a co-defendant, but not taking either side. The evidence established a family custom that the ancestral property should descend as an impartible estate, and should be possessed by a single heir at a time, who should be the eldest son. All the lines of evidence, of differing degrees of value, converged towards the same result, the existence of this custom of impartibility, and of primogeniture. In 1890, the plaintiffs, who were divided collaterals of H, sued to recover the lands, alleging that they succeeded thereto on the death of H, widows and daughters being excluded from inheritance according to the custom among the Gohel Girasias. The lower Courts found that the lands were never in plaintiff's possession; that M held them till December 1882, since which time defendants 1–3 had them in their enjoyment as purchasers from her; that the custom proved excluded daughters, but not widows, from inheritance; and that the claim was within time, having been made within twelve years of the death of M. On second appeal to the High Court,—held (1) that the alleged custom excluding daughters was not proved; (2) that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to shift the basis of their claim from an alleged custom which excluded both widows and daughters to one which only excluded daughters; (3) that since limitation must be applied to the plaintiff's claim as they made it, and tried to prove it, M's possession was adverse to them, and, being for more than twelve years, barred the suit. Basava v. *Lingangauda, I. 59. ———— Khoja Mahomedans—Succession—Letters of administration.—In the absence of satisfactory proof of a custom, differing from the Hindu law, the Courts of this Presidency apply to Khojas the Hindu law of inheritance and succession. If a custom opposed to Hindu law be alleged to exist amongst Khojas, the burden of proof rests upon the person setting up that custom. The Khojas, having been originally Hindus and converted from the Hindu religion by a dai, or missionary of the Imam of the Ismailis, to the Mahomedan religion of the Shia division and Imami Ismaili sub-division, and being partly regulated by Mahomedan law, partly by Hindu law, and partly by custom, occupy a position so peculiar that the Courts do not apply to them, when seeking to prove a custom of inheritance or succession, differing from the Hindu law, the stringent rule that the custom must be proved to be ancient, invariable, and submitted to as legally binding, but will act upon satisfactory evidence that it has been the general custom and accepted as such by the great majority of the Khoja community. A Khoja, having died intestate and without leaving issue, was survived by his mother (a widow), his wife, and a married sister. Held that, according to the custom of the Khojas, his mother was entitled to the management of his estate and therefore to letters of administration in preference to his wife or his sister. In 1873 R died, and on her death M procured the registration of his name in respect of her one-third share, it having been previously decided in proceedings by the settlement officer that the name of each claimant should be registered in respect of a one-third share. In 1879 B sued M for possession of the one-third share held by him claiming as heir of her deceased husband D, and alleging that M was not the legitimate son of D, and therefore not entitled to succeed to such rights. M set up as a defence that he was the legitimate son of D, and therefore entitled to succeed; and that, assuming he was not legitimate, he was entitled to succeed by the custom of the village. In support of such custom, M relied on the following entry in the village wajib-ul-urz:—"In this village a mistress treated as a wife and the child of such a mistress shall also have a right to transfer property and to obtain and receive property." Held M was illegitimate. Held also, with reference to the entry in the wajib-ul-urz, that it did not necessarily place illegitimate children on an equality with legitimate as heirs; and if that was its intention, it was ineffectual, as parties could not by agreement alter the law of succession; and if the entry was regarded as evidence of custom, it was not conclusive. The Hindu law recognizes not only corporate bodies with rights of property vested in the corporation apart from its individual members, but also the juridical persons or subjects called foundations. A Hindu who wishes to establish a religious or charitable institution may, according to his law, express his purpose and endow it, and the ruler will give effect to the bounty, or at least protect it. A trust is not required for this purpose as it is by English law. Those who take charge of gifts made to a religious or charitable institution—whether such gifts consist of cash, jewels, or land—incur thereby a responsibility for their due application to the purposes of the institution. They are answerable as trustees would be, even though they have not consciously accepted a trust; and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by a suit open to any one interested as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio. MANOHAR GANESH TAMBEKAR v. LAKHMIRAM GOVINDRAM

The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim to the immoveable property and endowment which he represented as acquired by his ancestors, the mohunt guddeenashins at Benares and himself. He denied that he was an agent, and claimed to be the real proprietor in possession and occupation by right of succession to his ancestors. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim. The High Court modified the decree, giving the plaintiff possession of certain chutters and gardens built or purchased out of funds remitted from Madras, and declaring him entitled to an account of a sum admitted to have been remitted from Tirpuntal, but holding that he had failed to make out possession of the muth, temple, or other property. Held that the original foundation having been admittedly at Benares, which is the holy place, and the object having been to afford to persons, either resident in the south of India or making pilgrimage to Benares, facilities for worship and religious duties there, raised a presumption that the establishment at Tirpuntal was subordinate to that at Benares. And that it was not shown that any change had been effected in the original constitution of the community. Held that the nature of the relation between the muths at Tirpuntal and Benares was that the former fed the establishment at the latter, the object of which was to afford facilities to pilgrims and others wishing to pay their devotions at Benares. On the death of a mohunt, the right to succeed to his landed and other property was contested between two goshains. Held that the claimant, in order to succeed, must prove the custom of the math entitling him to recover the office and the property appertaining to it. The evidence showed the custom to be that the title to succeed to the office and property was dependent on the successor's having been the chela approved and nominated as such by the late mohunt, and also after the death of the latter installed or confirmed as mohunt by the other goshains of the sect. Held that a claimant who failed to prove his installation or confirmation was not entitled to a decree for the office and property against a person alleging himself to have been a chela who, whether with or without title, was in possession. The claim extended also to religious establishments at Benares and elsewhere connected with the muth. The muth was founded by a member of the adhinam. Many previous heads of the muth had agreed to be "slaves" of the head of the adhinam, but for over 60 years the head of the adhinam had exercised no management over the endowments belonging to the muth; and in a suit (compromised) of the year 1874 the present pretensions of the head of the adhinam had been denied in toto. The defendant had succeeded in 1874 to the management of the muth under the will of his predecessor, dated the same year, and was not a disciple of the adhinam. Held (1) that the muth was affiliated to the adhinam, but the head of the adhinam is not entitled to appoint to the office of head of the math and was not entitled to an order for delivery of the property of the math to himself or to his appointee; (2) that on the evidence as to the usage in the establishments in question, the head of the math was entitled to appoint his successor, but his election was limited to members of the adhinam; and the head of the adhinam was entitled to enforce this rule, though he was bound to invest a disciple properly nominated by the head of the math; (3) that the defendant not being a disciple of the adhinam, his appointment was invalid, and the head of the adhinam was entitled to see that a competent member of the adhinam was appointed in his stead. The widow and the brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebait, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator's only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful, and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. Held that the plaintiff's claim to a preferential title to this office depended on a sentence in the will constituting, as construed by the Courts below, to be shebait the senior in age of the heirs of the original shebaits, the defendant now holding the office coming within this provision according to the jugments of both Courts. 45. ———————— Succession to the office of dharmakarta—Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Religious endowments—Custom and usage.—On a question of the right of succession to the office of dharmakarta of a devasthanam or temple at Rameswaram in Madura (and in such cases the only law applicable is the custom and practice, which are to be proved by evidence), both the Courts below found that, according to the established usage, the succession was provided for by each successive dharmakarta initiating a pandaram, and, whilst in office, appointing him as his successor. It followed that the appointment of a dharmakarta by one who had already ceased to hold the office (having been removed under Act XX of 1863, s. 14) was not in accordance with usage, and was therefore invalid. The person whom the displaced dharmakarta had attempted to appoint was head of the muth from which preceding dharmakartas, as it appeared, had been taken. Besides the above cause of invalidity in the appointment in question, the evidence supported the finding that the displaced dharmakarta made his attempt to appoint the head of the muth to succeed him in office in furtherance of his own interests, and did not bonâ fide exercise his powers, if any. This finding invalidated the whole appointment and applied to the headship of the muth as well as to the office of dharmakarta. RAMALINGAM PILLAI v. VYTHILINGAM PILLAI . I. L. R., 16 Mad., 490

47. ———————— Succession as mohant of a muth at Puri—Custom—Right of a chela—Alleged disqualification of mohant to take a chela by reason of being a leper.—Two rival claimants contested the right to succeed to the office of mohant of a mourasi muth under a customary rule of succession. Both the Courts below found that the mohant for the time being had power to appoint his successor from among his chelas; that, in the absence of appointment, a chela, or, if there should be more than one, the eldest chela, would succeed; and that, should there be no chela, then a gurubhai or chela of the same guru with the deceased mohant would succeed. The plaintiff's case was that he had been duly taken as a chela and appointed by the last mohant, whose title was not disputed. The defendant, who was in possession, denied that the plaintiff had ever been such a chela, alleging that, even if the last mohant had attempted to take him as a chela, this act would have been invalid by reason of that mohant having been a leper. The defendant's title was that he had been taken as a chela by the mohant who had preceded the last, and had been in a position to dispute the right of succession, but had yielded it when the last mohant had taken office. He put forward an alleged will of the latter, which stated that he was to succeed, and relied on his possession approved by other mohants. Held that only a leprosy of virulent form could have disqualified the last mohant. As to it, there was no medical evidence; but on the facts the conclusion was that there had been no such disqualification. The statements in the alleged will were not true, and it was ineffectual to alter the title, whether the last mohant had executed it or not, having no testamentary effect; also what had been done after the death of the last mohant could not deprive the plaintiff or entitle the defendant, there being no custom to authorize the choice of a mohant in that way. therefore, a mohunt who once nominates his successor has no right to give directions to his successor, when his turn to nominate comes, as to whom he should nominate. Fourthly, that the testator having no power to give any directions as to the person who should be L's successor, L was entitled, after he had succeeded to the guddi, to appoint as his successor a person other than G. Fifthly, that even if by custom a power to appoint two mohunts in succession had been established, still under the words of the will a discretion would have been left to L in the choice of his successor, and he would not have been bound to appoint G. It seems that in a suit for the recovery of an elective mohuntship to which the plaintiff claims to be mohunt, but does not show that he was elected, but merely that the defendant was not elected or was irregularly elected, the Court ought to dismiss the suit, and has no jurisdiction to direct a new election. Held by the Privy Council on appeal that the will did not give G an absolute, positive, unqualified right at any time to the mohuntship, even on the incapacity of L to perform the duties of mohunt; that until L became incapable, no trust or duty was created; that even when he became incapable, it was no more than a gift in the nature of a precatory trust. Held also on the evidence that G had failed to establish his own title to be mohunt, and that the suit was so framed that in it he could not recover the mohuntship on the mere infirmity of defendant's title. The only law as to mohunts and their offices is to be found in custom and practice which is to be proved by evidence. There cannot be two existing mohunts, and the office cannot be held jointly. 57. ———————— Succession to maurasi mohunt—Appointment of mohunt—Ceremonies—Revocation of nomination of chela—Disqualification of mohunt.—In the cases of a maurasi muth, the investiture by the leading neighbouring mohunts, at the Bandhara ceremony of one who cannot prove that he was actually appointed by the last mohunt, is not sufficient, in the absence of proof that he has a right to be so appointed as being senior chela of the last mohunt, to entitle him to succeed to the guddi. The succession to muths or religious endowments must be regulated in each case by the nature of the endowment and the rule of succession prescribed by the founder of the institution, and if this rule cannot be discovered from the original deed of gift or other documentary evidence, it must be proved in each case by showing what the usage has been on the occasion of each succession. A mohunt of a maurasi muth, by a deed of gift in 1849, made over all the property of the muth to his senior chela and invested him with the chudder of mohunti; but subsequently a dispute having arisen on account of the immoral life led by the appointee, a compromise was effected, by which the former mohunt was permitted to take back the muth and the property belonging to it, the other being allowed merely to retain possession of a subordinate muth. In 1873 the mohunt died, leaving a will, dated 6th May 1873, by which he appointed the defendant his successor. The original appointee thereupon obtained his own confirmation as mohunt at a Bandhara ceremony by the neighbouring mohunt, and brought a suit against the defendant, who was in possession for recovery of possession of the muth and the properties belonging thereto, relying on the deed of gift of 1849. Held that, the muth being maurasi, the plaintiff was not entitled to possession, there being no reason why the deed of gift should not be considered to have been cancelled by the compromise or by the will. His deposition from the gadi was an act of a foreign State, and did not affect his right to property in Bombay If he was regarded as owner of that property, he had not lost his right as such to the said property in consequence of his deposition, and if he was merely a trustee, he had not been removed from his office by any competent tribunal. Held also that under the will of C the first defendant was entitled to reside rent free in the first storey of the house in question during his lifetime GOSWAMI SHRI GIRDHARJI v MADHOWDAS PREMJI [I. and as such was manager of the property of the shrine. This shrine is held in great veneration by the Vaishnava sect of Hindus, and large bequests and offerings of money, land, etc., are made to it by members of that sect. To facilitate the collection of such offerings and the employment of the funds belonging to the shrine, firms are established in various parts of India, including Bombay. The firm in Bombay was carried on under the name of N P, and the house in which it was carried on was built with moneys belonging to the shrine. On the 8th May 1876, by order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the Maharana of Oodeypore, he was deposed from that office for alleged misconduct and deported from Nathdwara. In his place his son, the plaintiff, was placed on the gadi as high priest. In 1878 the plaintiff brought this suit praying for a declaration that as high priest of the shrine he was entitled to the property in Bombay belonging thereto, and for delivery of the same to him, and for an injunction against the defendant, and for a receiver, etc. He obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from receiving or dealing with the moneys of the said firm of N P and from tampering with the books, etc. Held, discharging the rule, that the plaintiff had shown no title to the property in question. The defendant was in possession, and had been for many years in possession, of the property. His deposition by a foreign power and the election of the plaintiff to the gadi in the place of the defendant did not transfer the title to property in Bombay from the defendant to the plaintiff. 86. ———— Effect of alienation—Decree obtained against shebait—Res judicata.—As a general rule of Hindu law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it is inalienable. It is competent, however, for the shebait in charge of property dedicated to the worship of an idol, in his capacity of shebait and as manager of the estate, to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile litigious attacks, and other like objects. The power to incur such debts is to be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them, the authority of the shebait being in this respect analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir. It being competent for a shebait to borrow money for necessary purposes, it follows that judgments obtained against a former shebait in respect of debts so incurred are binding upon succeeding shebaits, who form a continuing representation of the debutter property. But before applying the principle of res judicata to such judgments, the Court should be satisfied that the judgments relied upon are untainted by fraud or collusion, and that the necessary and proper issues have been raised, tried, and decided in the suits which led to them. Execution of such judgments should be decreed only against the rents and profits of the debutter property. PROSUNNO KUMARI DEBYA v. GOLAB CHAND BABOO . . 14 B. L. R., 450 [23 W. R., 253: L. 87. ———— Purchaser of endowed property, Notice to—Evidence of necessity for alienation.—A plaintiff who seeks to set aside an alienation of lands on the ground that they are debutter, i.e., dedicated in perpetuity to support the worship of an idol, must give strong and clear evidence of the endowment. The mere fact that the rents of a particular mehal have been applied for a considerable period to the worship of an idol is not sufficient proof that the mehal is debutter. The shebait or manager of a debutter estate has authority, where the purposes of the endowment require it, to raise money by alienating a part of the estate, his position being analogous to that of a manager of an infant heir under the Hindu law. The written conveyance of certain lands stated them to be debutter, and to be alienated to raise money to repair the temple of the idol. In a suit to set aside the alienation, it appeared that at the time of the transaction the temple required repairs, but that the vendor had not applied the whole of the purchase-money to that purpose. There being no evidence of any collusion on the part of the purchaser, or that he was aware at the time of the purchase that the money was to be applied otherwise than the conveyance expressed,—Held that the sale was valid.

The present defendant was appointed in 1877 to succeed him in the office of manager, but the mortgagor remained nevertheless in possession, and a suit by the present defendant to eject him was pending at the date of the mortgage. The plaintiff now sought to enforce his rights under the mortgage against the defendant and the property of which the defendant had been placed in possession as the result of the suit above referred to. Per Curiam.—The mortgagor was not disentitled to incur expenses so as to bind the rightful manager by the mere fact that the former was not de jure manager at the time the expenses were incurred, provided they were incurred for the preservation of the trust property or other justifiable purposes. R., 4 I. A., 76 : I. L. R., 1 Mad.,* 235, referred to and followed. The possession delivered to the purchaser was adverse to the vendors. After the twelve years' period of limitation, which expired in the lifetime of the vendor, whose son now sued to recover the hereditary managership and possession of the lands of the endowment, the suit was barred under Limitation Act XV of 1877. Held that there was no distinction between the claim to the office and the claim for the property in regard to the application of art. 124 of sch. II of the Act and of s. 28. If there were, art. 144 would apply to the claim for the property. In order to fix the starting point for limitation at a date later than that of the transfer, it was contended that the office and title were held in successive life-estates. If that contention had been right, the period of limitation would have commenced at the death of the plaintiff's father. The judicial committee were of opinion that it must be assumed that the origin of the endowment was by gift from the founder, and that, in accordance with the ruling in Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore, L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47 : 9 B. L. R., 377, heritable estates could not be created to take effect as successive life-estates, and inconsistently with the general law. This applied to both the office and the property. Held that the law of inheritance did not permit the creation of successive life-estates in this endowment; the above ruling being also contrary to the judgment in Trimbak Bava v. *Narayan Bawa, I. on a debt incurred for family purposes.—A house, being ancestral property of a Hindu family, was sold in execution of a decree by which the decree-amount was constituted a charge on such property. The debt sued on had been incurred for the benefit of the family by the co-parceners for the time being, but since the death of such co-parcener's father,—Held the widow of the latter, who resided in the said house during her husband's lifetime, was not entitled as against a purchaser for value in good faith under such decree (but with notice that she resided and during her husband's life had resided in that house, and still claimed to reside there) to continue to reside for life in such portion of the house sold as she resided in subsequent to her husband's death. Venkatammal v. *Andyappa, I. On the 12th October 1876, the defendant sued R for maintenance, and alleged that the house in question was the property of her deceased husband and R, and she claimed the right to continue to live in it. On the 10th of November 1876, and during the pendency of the defendant's suit against R, the house was sold under the plaintiff's decree against R, and the plaintiff himself became the purchaser. On the 20th of June 1877, the defendant obtained a decree against R in terms of the prayer of her plaint. At this time he was possessed of a one-third share in a certain partnership business. After the death of S, M, one of the daughters, sued N, the adopted son, for one-third of her father's property including his share in the partnership business. Held that, inasmuch as the donor had relinquished the subject of the gift, so far as he could, and had vested it in the donees, possessi n under the gift had passed to M. Held also, on the construction of such instrument, that it did not give M a share in her father's partnership business. 14. ——— Attestation of deed, Effect of.—In 1873, R, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of his immoveable property to his daughter M (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff. In 1878 R mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. R died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1888, the plaintiff being dispossessed by M and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 R had not completed his gift to M by giving possession He was therefore in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that M had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption. Held also that the circumstance that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession. On his death-bed he told his son, P (the plaintiff's father), to give these lands to his (G's) daughter, the defendant. In the following year (1879) P by a registered deed of gift gave the lands to the defendant. The deed contained the following recital:—"Our vadil (father) G has made a gift to you of his self-acquired lands, Nos. 101 and 102, of mouzah Vadgaon for your own and your children's maintenance, and has directed me (P) to execute an instrument according to law. I (P) hereby execute a deed of gift to you." Shortly after the execution of this document, the defendant was put into possession of the lands, and she admittedly continued in possession down to the commencement of this suit in 1888. The plaintiffs, who were the minor children of P, now sought to recover these lands from the defendant, alleging that on the death of their grandfather G the lands had devolved by inheritance upon his son P (their father), and contending that the latter had no power to make a gift of these to the defendant. The lower Court found that the question of P's competency to give the lands did not arise, as they had already been given to the defendant by his father G, and that P was simply an instrument in carrying out the wishes of his father bakshishpatra and given possession of the property to M under it. He directed the property to be restored to the possession of M, to be held according to the terms of the bakshishpatra. C appealed, but subsequently withdrew his appeal, admitting the execution of the bakshishpatra and agreeing to give over the property to M according to the terms of the Munsif's decree. M accordingly obtained possession of the property. On the 16th March 1874, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the grandson of M (M then being dead) for a moiety of the property on the ground that C, his adoptive father, could not alienate more than one-half of the property. Both the lower Courts allowed the plaintiff's claim, the Court of first instance being of opinion that the document was a gift, and did not bind the plaintiff, and the Appellate Court holding that it was not a gift, but a will, and that it had been revoked by the testator before his death. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that the document was a conveyance and not a will, and that it vested the property in M, the donee, subject to a trust regarding any surplus that remained of the income after payment of the Government assessment and village expenses in favour of C as long as he lived, and that the donor could not revoke it, inasmuch as the document contained no power of revocation. Held also that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had been adopted before the hearing and decree in suit No. 446 of 1859 and might have been made a party to it, but was not, he could not be bound by proceedings in that suit, and that he was therefore at liberty to re-open the question whether the bakshishpatra was intended by C, when executing it, to operate as a deed or as a will. An adoption pendente lite is not to be regarded in the same light as an alienation pendente lite. If a legitimate son has been born to C during the suit, such son, to be bound by a pending suit affecting his father's ancestral property, must have been made a party, and a son adopted during the suit is in the same position. The one at his birth and the other at his adoption would take a vested interest in his father's property according to the Hindu law in the Presidency of Bombay. The circumstances that C might have adopted the plaintiff for the purpose of endeavouring to defeat the bakshishpatra did not alter the case. As a sonless Hindu, he had a right to adopt a son, and he was not under any obligation to M not to adopt; and, even if he had so contracted, quære—whether such a contract would affect the validity of the adoption. In 1877 a daughter, S, had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. ———— Suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Desertion—Cruelty—Insanity of husband—Limitation—Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act), s 23, sch ii, arts 34, 35, and 120 —The texts of and duties which they create may be enforced by either party against the other, and not exclusively by the husband against the wife The Civil Courts of British India, as occupying the position in respect of judicial functions formerly occupied in the system of Hindu law by the king, have undoubtedly jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of such rights and duties. The Civil Courts of British India can therefore properly entertain a suit between Hindus for the restitution of conjugal rights, or for the recovery of a wife who has deserted her husband It is not necessary, as a condition precedent to such suits, the parties being Hindus, that there should be any demand by the plaintiff and refusal by the defendant The provisions of arts 34 and 35 of the second schedule which could not have been contemplated by a statute of the nature and scope of the Limitation Act The limitation applicable to suits of the present nature is that of art 120 of the second schedule, read with s 23 of the Limitation Act Desertion by a wife of her husband is permitted by the Hindu law under certain circumstances, but the insanity of the husband will not justify his desertion by the wife In any case, desertion does not terminate the relation of husband and wife. A suit for restitution of conjugal rights could in such case only be effectually met by establishing a plea of some matrimonial offence on the part of the complainant such as would entitle the defendant to a separation Legal cruelty on the part of the complainant may be a ground for refusing restitution of conjugal rights or for imposing terms on the complainant BINDA v KAUNSILIA

The law, therefore, to be applied in cases of inheritance is the usage of the country in which the suit arises (see Bom. Reg. II of 1826, s. 26). The commentaries and text-books embody in many instances the rules formed and enforced by custom, but custom, even on Hindu principles, may and must have power without their aid. They do not govern the usage of the country, save by a reflex process; it is the usage which adopts them, and they are law only because of this adoption in the sense and within the limits according to which their rules are accepted. (a) COORG.

12. ——— Inheritance, Law of—Mitakshara law.—The ex-Rajah of Coorg died in England in 1859, leaving considerable moveable property which he had himself acquired and accumulated, chiefly by means of his pensions and some ancestral jewels and ornaments. By his last will and testament he left all his property to trustees in trust to pay thereout certain legacies, and to divide the residue in certain proportions among various members of his family. Some difficulty having arisen after his death regarding the distribution of his estate, the Court of Chancery stated a case and propounded certain questions under 22 & 23 Vict., c. 63, for the opinion of Her Majesty's late Supreme Court at Fort William in Bengal, with reference to the Hindu law as administered by that Court, and so far as the same was applicable to the facts set forth in the case stated. The first and chief question propounded was—"What school of Hindu law would govern the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, and the rights and interests of the members of his immediate family, with reference to the will and facts stated, and also supposing he had died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property?" In answer to this question, the Court held that the doctrines of the Benares school of Hindu law, as laid down in the Mitakshara, should govern the decision of the case regarding the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, on the ground that the Mitakshara is the leading authority of Hindu law throughout Southern India as well as Benares, and that the Court had no reason to suppose that the doctrines of the Mitakshara had been in any way varied or altered by any text book recognized as an authority in Coorg, although some variations prevail in various parts of Southern India. The Court were further of opinion that the doctrines of the

15. ——— Custom—Joint family—Joint and ancestral property.—Cutchi Memons are governed by the Hindu law of inheritance in the absence of proof of special custom. A custom alleged to exist among Cutchi Memons of recognizing no difference between ancestral and self-acquired property held not proved. Four brothers of the Cutchi Memon community carried on trade with capital inherited from their father. Large profits were made in the course of business. It was alleged that some of the profits were made by means of borrowed capital, and some arose out of a commission business in which the capital of the firm was not used at all; and it was contended that such profits could not be considered as ancestral funds. It appeared, however, that the entire business was carried on by the same firm. There were common books, common expenses, and a common staff. The borrowed money was put into the general cash with the original capital. Held that the whole property was ancestral. Augmentations which blend, as they accrue, with the original estate partake of the character of that estate. Moreover, the loans in question and the extension of business to which they led might have produced heavy losses instead of great profits, and the family property would have been liable to debts so incurred. The family property, being thus subject to liabilities arising from the loans, was entitled to participate in any benefits resulting from them. MAHOMED SIDICK v. AHMED. II, s. 6, is not an exhaustive one. The maternal uncle of the deceased is omitted, but the sons of that uncle are specified. The omission to mention a maternal uncle does not signify that he is excluded from the first class of bandhus. The grounds of the judgment in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Government of Bengal, 1 B. L. R., P. C., 44 : 12 Moore's I. A., 448, apply not only to the heirship of a maternal uncle as against the claim in default of heirs, but also apply equally to questions between nearer and more remote bandhus. A maternal uncle is accordingly an heir, though not specified in the Mitakshara list, and he also has priority over the sons and grandsons of the paternal aunt of the father of the deceased, who are more remote than he is. A mother's brother by the half-blood stands on the same footing as her whole brother in regard to priority over more remote bandhus. 49. ———— Preference of, to bandhus or bhinna gotra-sapindas—Vatan service, Alienability of, beyond lifetime by will—Effect of subsequent change in the tenure rendering it alienable.—The word "samanodakas," meaning literally those participating in the same oblation of water, includes descendants from a common ancestor more remotely related than the thirteenth degree from the propositus. One P died childless, devising his entire property, including his right to receive annually a certain desaigiri cash allowance, to the plaintiff's husband after the death of his (testator's) widow, B A. The testator and the plaintiff's husband were great-grandsons of one K by his son and daughter respectively. The plaintiff's husband having predeceased B A, she made another will in favour of the plaintiff. Subsequently B A died. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against the defendants, claiming the aforesaid cash allowance and arrears under these wills and as heir of P. The defendants, who were distant cousins of P, being related to him beyond the thirteenth degree, inter alia contended that the wills were invalid, as P, when he made the will, had only a life-interest in the vatan, which was a service vatan, and that they were nearer heirs to P than the plaintiff, who was a bhinna gotra-sapinda or bandhu of P. Both the lower Courts rejected plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that plaintiff's claim should be disallowed. The alienation by will by P of what was then a vatan held for service, being in its inception invalid as against his heirs, did not become valid because of a change in the tenure of the estate after his life-interest had terminated. B A, the widow of P, had nothing more than a widow's estate incapable of alienation beyond her lifetime, and therefore the wills executed by her were invalid. The case was one to be determined by the Hindu law of inheritance. The defendants, though more than thirteen degrees removed from P, were included in the term "samanodakas," and as such had a claim to the estate of P superior to that of the plaintiff or her deceased husband as his bandhus. In a suit by an adopted son to recover his share in his adoptive father's estate, a son having been born to the adoptive father subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, the Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a fourth share of the property in dispute. The defendant appealed to the District Court, but in appeal raised no question as to the extent of the share awarded to the plaintiff. On second appeal to the High Court it was contended that, in any event, the plaintiff was only entitled to a fifth share. Held that, under the circumstances and having regard to the nature of the question, the point might be taken in second appeal on behalf of the defendant, and the High Court varied the decree by awarding the plaintiff a fifth share instead of a fourth share, but ordered the appellant (defendant) to bear his own costs of the appeal. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and upon these findings gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the plaintiff's rights as a daughter's son (which were not affected by his birth having taken place after his maternal grandfather's death) did not entitle him, under ordinary circumstances, to succeed to his maternal grandfather's estate in a divided Hindu family during the existence of a daughter, whether she were his own mother or his maternal aunt: and that the claim for possession was therefore rightly dismissed. Amirtolal Bose v. *Rajoneekant Mitter, 15 B. (b) FEMALES.

166. ——— General rules - Succession of female heirs—Nature of property.—It is not the universal rule that a Hindu woman cannot inherit so long as there is a male representative of the family. Her right to inherit depends on the nature of the property. If the property be the joint property of an undivided Hindu family, females are only entitled to maintenance; but if the property be held as a separate or divided property, it devolves upon the female heirs in their proper order of succession. 167. ——— Exclusion of female heirs—Mitakshara law—Joint property.—When it is sought to exclude female heirs from succession to a husband or father under the Mitakshara, on the ground that the estate is joint, it must be shown to have been so at the time of the husband's or father's death, and not merely at the death of a predeceasing brother, the father of the claimant. 168. ——— Limited estate in immoveable property inherited by females who have become members of family by marriage—Absolute estate in immoveable property taken by females who have not become members of family by marriage—Nature of estate taken by widow, mother, grandmother, daughter, sister, maternal great-niece.—A maternal great-niece inheriting property is in the same position, as regards the nature of the estate taken by her, as a daughter or a sister. The rule which, in the Presidency of Bombay, restricts the alienation of property by a widow succeeding to her husband or a mother succeeding to her son, does not apply to women who have not become members of the family by marriage, e.g., a daughter takes an absolute estate in the property which she inherits from her father, and a sister takes a like estate in property inherited from her brother. The above rule, which restricts the alienation of property by a widow inheriting from her husband or by a mother inheriting from her son, would seem to be applicable to a grandmother inheriting from her grandson, or to the widow of a sapinda, for they, like the widow and mother, enter by marriage into the family whence the property comes which they inherit. The plaintiff sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property left by his brother's widow, L, who died without issue. The property in question had been given to L and her grandmother, R, jointly by R's sister, M (L's maternal grand-aunt), who executed to them a deed of gift dated 17th December 1843. On her death, R and L took possession, and remained in joint possession until the death of R, which occurred in 1867. L was thenceforward, until her death on April 19th, 1869, in sole possession. The plaintiff had obtained a certificate of heirship to L under Bombay Regulation VIII of 1827. The defendants were L's first cousins once removed. They claimed under a deed of gift executed to them dated 27th February 1869, and duly registered. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires both as to the moveable and immoveable property. On appeal to the District Court, the Judge varied the decree of the lower Court, holding the deed of gift to be ultra vires only as to the immoveable property, and he varied the decree by awarding to the plaintiff as heir of L the immoveable property only. On appeal to the High Court, the only question argued was the nature of the estate taken by L in the immoveable property, her absolute right to the moveable property being admitted. Held that, whether L took by grant or by inheritance from M, she took an absolute estate, and, being as she was without issue, had complete power to execute the deed of gift in favour of the defendants. Thus the widow of first cousin ex-parte paterna of the deceased propositus was held prior in order of succession to a fifth male cousin ex-parte paterna of the same. Or, in other words, a wife becomes by her marriage a sagotra-sapinda of her husband and his gotraja-sapindas, and in that capacity succeeds as a widow to property which he would have taken as a sapinda before the male representative of a remoter branch. The Institutes of Manu, the Mitakshara, and the Mayukha, although of great authority in the Presidency of Bombay, are all subject to the control of law and usage. No one of them is, as a whole, in full force in any part of the Presidency. In the same case on appeal it was held by the Privy Council,—By the Hindu law in force in Western India the widow of a collateral relation, although she is not specified in the texts amongst the heirs to members of her husband's family, may come into the succession as one of the classes of gotraja-sapindas of that family. According to the law of the Mitakshara as accepted in Western India, the right to inherit in the classes of gotraja-sapindas is to be determined by family relationship, or the community of corporal particles, and not only by the capacity of performing funeral rites. The High Court having affirmed as a right, according to the law actually prevalent in Western India, the claim of a widow of a first cousin, on the father's side, of the deceased to inherit his estate as a gotraja-sapinda, it was held that there was no reason for withholding from that doctrine the force of law; the right of the widow being mainly rested on the ground of positive acceptance and usage. In this case the widow of a first cousin of the deceased, on the father's side, was held to have become by her marriage gotraja-sapinda of her husband's cousin's family, and to have a title to succeed to the estate of that cousin on his decease, in priority to male collateral gotraja-sapindas, who were seventh in descent from an ancestor common to them and to the deceased, who was sixth from that common ancestor. After the death of B M, the plaintiff, who was the son of T's sister, sued to recover the property from the defendants, who were distant samanodaka relations of N. It was contended on the plaintiff's behalf that on J's death B M took the property as her stridhan acquired by inheritance, and that the plaintiff, as bandhu of her husband T, was heir to B M, who died without issue. Held (confirming the decree dismissing the suit) that on J's death (N and H being divided) B M succeeded to the property as a gotraja sapinda, being the widow of T, the nephew of N. As such, she took only a life-interest in the property, and had no absolute interest in it as in her stridhan proper. In the Presidency of Bombay female heirs who by marriage enter into the gotra of the male whom they succeed (including widow, mother, grandmother, the widow of a gotraja-sapinda, etc.) take only a widow's estate in property which they inherit from the last male owner. Whether the estate inherited by these female heirs is called their stridhan or not, their restricted rights over it are admitted by all schools. The extent to which this right exists considered, and the texts of Hindu law books bearing on the point referred to. According to Vijnyaneshvara, the author of the Mitakshara (Ch. I, s. 12), the father of an illegitimate son by a Dasi among Sudras may, in his (the father's) lifetime, allot to such son a share equal to that of a legitimate son, and, if the father die without making such allotment, the illegitimate son by the Dasi is entitled to half the share of a legitimate son, and, if there be no legitimate son and no legitimate daughter or son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son by the Dasi takes the whole estate. If, however, there be a legitimate daughter or legitimate son of such a daughter, the illegitimate son would take only half of the share of a legitimate son, and such daughter or daughter's son would take the residue of the property, subject to the charge of maintaining the widow of the deceased proprietor. Next, it should be seen whether family custom or kulachar discloses a special rule of selection, and, in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to general Hindu law. Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to co-parcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. Where therefore the family property is impartible and belongs to a co-parcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the deceased propositus, whether of the whole or half-blood, in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years. Thus, when a Sudra marries a woman of his caste, but of an inferior class, as a dagger wife, in addition to his wife equal in caste to him, the rule of selection is in favour of his son by the latter by reason of the mother being of a higher class. A valid custom prevails among the Kumbla zamindars, whereby the son by a senior wife has a prior right of succession to a son by a junior wife, although the latter may be the elder son, seniority referring to the date of the marriage and not the age of the wife. The unity of the family right to the heritage is not dissevered any more than by the succession of co-parceners to partible property; but the mode of its beneficial enjoyment is different. Instead of several members of the family holding the property in common, one takes it in its entirety, and the common law rights of the others, who would be co-parceners of partible property, are reduced to rights of survivorship to the whole, dependent upon the same contingency as the rights of survivorship of co-parceners inter se to the undivided share of each, and to a provision for maintenance in lieu of co-parcenary shares. to a zamindari which is admitted to be in the nature of a principality, impartible and capable of enjoyment by only one member of the family at a time, is governed (in the absence of a special custom of descent) by the general Hindu law prevalent in the part of India in which the zamindari is situated, with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. The course of succession, according to the Hindu law of the south of India of such a zamindari, where the family was in other respects an undivided family, was held to be that the husband dying without male issue, his widow inherited it. XXV of 1802.*—The question whether an estate is impartible and decends by the law of primogeniture, or is subject to the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, must be decided in each case according to the evidence given in it. The result of the evidence in this suit was to show that before and in the year 1802, the zamindar was in possession of the Devarakota zamindari, by right of primogeniture, as an impartible estate; and that he was so regarded by the Government. On the passing of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802, and the issue to him of a sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari in accordance with it, he acquired a permanent property in the zamindari lands at a fixed assessment, but they remained heritable as before; the estate remained entire; and there was no evidence of any intention on the part of the Government to alter the nature of the tenure. What was said in the judgment in the Hansapur case, 12 Moore's I. A., 1, was applicable here. The estate continued to be impartible, and the rule of succession to it was not altered. It was clear from the kabuliat, or instrument of assent to the sanad-i-milkiyat-i-istimrari of 25th April 1804, that the latter was in the ordinary form of such grants, and there was no ground for inferring that the Government intended to create an impartible zamindari, or to restore an old one with impartibility attached. In 1835 there was, for a second time, such a dealing with the estate by the Government, in granting it again by sanad, as showed that there was no intention to the effect above mentioned. The case of the Hansapur Zamindari, 12 Moore's I. A., 1, situate in Behar, as to which their Lordships in 1867 held that it must be taken to retain its previous old quality of impartibility after having been granted in 1790, was distinguished. She died in 1877, leaving the present plaintiff, her son and three daughters her surviving. A suit was then brought by the father of the present defendant, who was the son of her elder sister (deceased), against the present plaintiff and the daughter of the late Rani for possession of the zamindari to which he claimed to be entitled by right of inheritance. A decree was passed for the plaintiff in that suit, under which he obtained possession of the zamindari and retained it until his death in 1883, when he was succeeded by the present defendant. The plaintiff now sued as above, claiming that the right to the zamindari had devolved on him, and not on the defendant, on the death of the plaintiff in the former suit. Held (1) that the defendant's father had not succeeded to a qualified heritage, nor to a mere right of management of joint family property in which the plaintiff had a right of survivorship, but that he had succeeded to the estate as full owner, and had therefore become a fresh stock of descent; (2) that accordingly nearness or remoteness of relationship to the istimrar true successor was the heir of the last owner of the originally unobstructed estate, though this did not apply to a partible estate. But for such a distinction no authority was cited, nor any principle suggested; and it was not upheld. The parties to this suit, first cousins once removed, contested the right to inherit an impartible zamindari, which had been acquired by their common ancestor, who had left two daughters by two different wives. The plaintiff was the son of the younger daughter; the defendant's father was the son of the elder. The younger half-sister survived the elder, and in 1863 was judicially declared to have inherited alone the impartible zamindari. On her death, the elder daughter's son, in litigation ending in 1881, made good his title to the impartible zamindari, being the descendant in the elder line. Held that this son of the elder daughter became, as the last male owner, the stock from which descent had now to be traced, and that the ancestor was no longer that stock. And held that the son of this last male owner had a title to the zamindari on his father's death in consequence of the full and complete ownership of the latter, who had himself become a fresh root of title. This decision disposed of the only question that was argued on this appeal. But the decision of the Courts below that the plaintiff could not claim the inheritance in virtue of survivorship was also affirmed. The judgment below, on this part of the case, was based on this, that no family coparcenary had existed to give rise to survivorship, as the sons of daughters could not form a family coparcenary, which could only consist of the descendants of a paternal ancestor. 329. ———— Succession to raj—Grant by Government—Beng. Reg. XI of 1793—Rights of junior members of family.—The land sued for was originally an impartible raj, and by family custom descended on the death of each successive Rajah to his eldest male heir. It was confiscated by Government, and in 1790, when the decennial settlement was made, was permanently conferred on A, a Hindu. A in his lifetime, by his acts and otherwise, showed that he wanted the estate to descend to a single heir, and shortly before his death he made B, the son of his eldest grandson, such heir, and left a testamentary paper in furtherance of that object. The present suit was brought by some of the grandsons of A, who claimed to be co-heirs with B under the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, and contended that the will was a forgery; that A had no power to make it; and that the special law of inheritance ceased when the first proprietor was expelled. It was found from the acts of the Government, and its dealings with the property, that A derived his title by grant from the Government, who had full dominion over the estate. The estate consequently must be taken to have been the separate and self-acquired property of A, and the nature of the estate granted was held to be a fresh grant of the family raj, as it had existed before the confiscation, with its customary rule of descent, the omission of the title of raj in the grant (there being no sanad in this case) not affecting the case, the title of Rajah not being absolutely essential to the tenure of the estate as a raj. Regulation XI of 1793 did not apply to this case, in which the grant was made before the passing of that Regulation, which, moreover, does not affect the descent of large zamindaris held as raj, or subject to family custom. The grant being of the nature found, it was further held that the question as to whether A had by law power to make a will did not really arise in this case, the only person who could impeach the will being the eldest grandson of A, who had waived his right in favour of his son B, there being no inchoate rights of inheritance in the junior members of the family. But the law of partition shows that, as to the separately acquired property of one member of a united family, the other members of that family have neither community of interest nor unity of possession. Sadu and Mahadu continued to live together for some time after their father's death; but subsequently, owing to domestic quarrels they lived separately, and Sadu was allowed by Mahadu a portion of the family property under an agreement in writing. Where a raj estate ancestral and impartible was not separate property and the family was undivided and where no special custom existed modifying the Mitakshara law of succession —Held that the nearest male collateral relation of the last Rajah, who died without male issue, was entitled to succeed in preference to the Rajah's widow This relation viz a brother of the late Rajah's deceased father at one time received an allowance for maintenance out of the family estate What amounted to an attachment of this according to a subsequent judicial decision, occurred in 1857 Held that he had not thereby been deprived of his right of succeeding as a member of the joint family The raj estate in question originated in the partition of a more ancient one with others out of which minor estates were formed. If in the latter there had been descents to widows no inference hence, to support the widow's claim to inherit in this family, could be drawn Such minor estates might have been separate (which estates granted for maintenance probably would be) and in that case the widows of the last holders would have succeeded them in due course of law Unless connection is shown between families evidence of a special family custom in one is not evidence of a similar family custom in another RUP SINGH v BAISNI said with joint funds and for the joint family, which consisted of I and his two brothers, fathers of the plaintiffs. The defence was that the lease was granted to I after the dissolution of commensality. The existence of any nucleus of joint property was not proved. Held that, where one member of a joint family is found to be in possession of any property, the family being presumed to be joint in estate, the presumption is, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of a joint family. Therefore, the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that I had acquired the property separately, and that it was property which could by law be treated as a separate acquisition. 31. ——— Joint property—Presumption that family is joint.—The presumption of Hindu law is that every family is joint, and that all property possessed by the family is joint. A member of an undivided family may, however, acquire separate property, but the burden of proof lies upon him to prove the independent character of the acquisition. The essence of his exclusive title is that the separate property was acquired by his sole agency without employing what is common to the family. MOOLJI LILLA v. GOKULDAS VULLA [I. L. 32. ——— Presumption as to family being joint—Joint enjoyment of property. —The normal condition of a Hindu family being joint, it must be presumed to remain joint, unless some proof of a subsequent separation is given; and where property is shown to have been once joint family property, it is presumed to remain joint until the contrary is shown; but the mere fact of a family being joint is not enough to raise a presumption in law that property acquired by one member of that family is joint property. Where A, as purchaser, claimed a share in property as being joint family property,—Held that A was not only bound to show that the family was joint, but that the property in question became joint property when acquired, or that at some period since its acquisition it had been enjoyed jointly by the family. 35. ——— Acquiescence in property being considered joint.—Certain Hindus descended from a common ancestor, after having lived in commensality and joint estate, separated, no deed of separation being executed or reservation expressed of any kind. About eleven years after, one of the parties to the separation sued the others, alleging that certain immoveable property, which stood in the name of the defendants or their ancestor, had remained in the possession of the defendants on the allegation of exclusive purchase; but that it could be proved to have been acquired by joint ancestral income during the time the family was joint. Held that the common presumption of Hindu law in favour of members of a joint family did not apply to such a case, and it lay on the plaintiffs to show why they were silent so long. Where other property was proved to have been separately acquired by the members of the family, it was held that there was no more presumption of joint than of separate acquisition. That criterion, though the most satisfactory, is not indispensable. Evidence that the property claimed to be joint was purchased in the name of one member only, that after the purchase the members separated, and each member carried on business separately, and that the property was thenceforward in the exclusive possession, and used for the business, of the member in whose name it had been purchased, is evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption that the property was joint. 133. ——— Burden of proof where property alleged to be ancestral—Property derived by a son from his mother where it originally formed part of his father's estate.—Where a Hindu by will leaves property to another which is afterwards alleged to be ancestral by members of the testator's family, the burden of proving it to be ancestral rests on the plaintiffs. There is no presumption of Hindu law as to its character. P M, a Hindu, died in 1831, having by his will bequeathed all his estate to his wife P and his three minor sons, A, B, and C, and directed as follows: "In the event of my wife's demise previous to my sons' attaining their full age of twenty-one years to entitle them to claim their respective shares of whatever may be left after marrying, etc., then I direct my surviving executors will secure my property and divide the whole among such sons or the survivors of them." Subsequently to the testator's death, his widow P managed his estate, and probate of his will was granted to her alone in January 1832. In 1836 she bought the V property for R2,801. There was no evidence to show out of what funds this property was bought, but the deed of sale stated that it was assigned to "P, widow and administratrix of the late P M, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In 1845 the eldest son A separated from the family, and gave a release to his mother P. In 1854 she purchased the X property for R8,452, the conveyance being to "P, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." In this deed also she was described as "the widow and administratrix of P M, deceased." In the same year, viz., 1854, the second son B separated and gave P a release. The third son C (the third defendant) continued to live with his mother P until 1871, in which year she died intestate. C then entered into possession of all the property which she had or managed in her lifetime, including the V and X properties. In 1879 he mortgaged these properties to the first two defendants for R12,500. His sons (the plaintiffs) now alleged those properties to be ancestral, and complained that he and the mortgagees were acting in collusion, that he had charged the properties unnecessarily, and that he and the mortgagees were about to sell them at an undervalue for the purpose of defeating their (the plaintiffs') rights. They therefore filed this suit, and prayed (inter aliâ) that the claims of the mortgagees, after being ascertained, might be paid off. The defendants denied that the properties in question were ancestral property in the hands of C (the third defendant) or that the plaintiffs, as his sons, had any interest therein. Held that the interest which the third defendant C derived from his mother P in the mortgaged premises was ancestral property, in respect of which the plaintiff had no present right of interference. The Court ordered that on payment

The University, on the other hand, contended that the accumulations and accretions formed part of the self-acquired property of the testator, and went to the University under the residuary clause of the will. Held (TYABJI, J.) (1) that the effect of the agreement was to make the property specified in Part I of the schedule thereto ancestral property as between the parties to the agreement. The plaintiffs had taken conveyances from the executors and had given releases to the executors, and in a previous suit (No. 670 of 1892) the first plaintiff had in his evidence stated that he did not wish to dispute the will, and that he had elected to take under it. Held that by their conduct the plaintiffs had elected to take the properties in question under the will, and could not maintain a suit for an account of the rents and profits either under or in opposition to the will. Held also that the sons of the plaintiffs (the minor defendants) were bound by the acts of the plaintiffs. The arrangement being of such an extraordinary character as to leave it in the power of each member to draw to an unlimited extent upon the assets of the firm, the Privy Council declined to extend the operation of such an agreement one iota beyond its terms, and were therefore of opinion that the High Court was right in drawing a distinction between pledging the credit of the firm and drawing out money actually belonging to the firm. 150. ———— Self-acquired immoveables—Construction of words of a sanad granting an absolute estate of inheritance—Change of ancestral character of immoveables—Mortgage and foreclosure—Boná fide re-acquisition for value by mortgagor's descendant.—A father, being a member of an undivided family subject to the Mitakshara, can exercise full power of disposition at his own discretion over immoveables which he has himself acquired, as distinguished from ancestral property. The immoveables alienated by a father's gift, disputed by his son, partly consisted of zamindari rights in villages which had been at one time ancestral in the family, but had been transferred to satisfy the debts of an ancestor, and had been acquired back by his descendant, the donor. As to one of these villages, the Courts below had differed whether it was self-acquired property in the donor's hands. It had been mortgaged by the ancestors; and the mortgage had been foreclosed under Regulation XVII of 1806, before having been re-acquired by the donor. That the foreclosure and re-acquisition were genuine were facts found upon evidence, including that of prior, concurrent decrees maintaining the foreclosure, as between other parties. Held that the re-acquisition was not a redemption of an estate inherited from an ancestor, and merely encumbered; but that the once ancestral character of this village had been destroyed by the foreclosure. Like the other villages alienated by the father's gift, it was self-acquired by the donor. Other immoveable property comprised in the gift consisted of a malikana payable out of other villages conferred upon the donor by a Government sanad granting a muafi on seven villages to him for life, and declaring that "the zamindars who now pay the revenue will pay it to him, and after him they shall ever pay ten per cent. as malikana allowance to his heir after the deduction of Government revenue for generation after generation." Held that the grant of the malikana was absolute to the one grantee: that there were not two gifts, one for life to the grantee, and the other a distinct gift after his death, to the person who should then be his heir. The malikana formed part of the grantee's heritable property and was self-acquired. BALWANT SINGH v. RANIKISHORI

179. ——— Business carried on by one member as manager—Liability of all as joint owners—Ancestral trade and ordinary partnership, Difference between—Contract Act, IX of 1872.—J, the father of the three defendants, established a trading firm in 1865 under the name of J H. He and his three sons lived together as a joint Hindu family. J died in 1872, and the business was continued under the same name by S as the eldest brother and manager of the family. The youngest of the three brothers was a minor at the date of his father's death. The plaintiff sued the three brothers to recover money due on an account signed by S in the name of the firm. The second defendant contended that he had never participated in the property of the business; that he had not resided at the family residence for six years; that he could not be considered a partner of the firm, and therefore was not liable to the plaintiff. Held that he could not repudiate a liability arising out of the ordinary transactions of the firm. During his father's life he was joint owner, and after his father's death he acquiesced in the continuance of the firm under the same name, and ostensibly therefore with the same constitution. He had done no act to divest himself of his share. He had given no notice of repudiation and made no partition, and there was nothing to prevent him from demanding his share of the partnership or claiming to share in the profits. There was therefore nothing to exempt him from the ordinary rule of Hindu law, which makes every member of a united family liable for debts properly incurred by a manager for the benefit of the family. The debt due to the plaintiff for goods supplied to the shop was properly incurred in the course of the ordinary transactions of the firm, and presumably therefore for the benefit of all the joint owners of the firm. The rights and liabilities arising out of joint ownership in a trading business created through the operation of Hindu law between the members of an undivided Hindu family cannot be determined by exclusive reference to the Contract Act (IX of 1872), but must be considered also with regard to the general rules of Hindu law which regulate the transactions of united families. An ancestral trade may descend, like other inheritable property, upon the members of a Hindu undivided family. The acquired under it a title to the minor's share of the property. Upon the question of what is the amount of proof which the law renders necessary to discharge that burden of proof,—Held that where the dispute as to the validity of a sale or mortgage of family property is with the person to whom it was made, and the pecuniary consideration for it has not been advanced for the purpose of discharging an antecedent charge on the property or an old debt incurred by an ancestor; the case of the vendee or mortgagee, as regards the existence of a family need or sufficient beneficial purpose requiring the advance of the consideration-money, must be established by positive proof. But that between a bonâ fide sale or mortgage for an advance made to pay off a pre-existing mortgage claim or an unsecured debt of an ancestor, and one not made for that purpose, there was this distinction to be observed, that the burden of establishing by direct proof that such prior claim or debt was incurred for a proper family purpose is not cast upon the vendee or mortgagee. He is only required to show this presumptively. But to do so it is incumbent on him to give proof not only of the consideration-money for the sale or mortgage having been bonâ fide advanced in discharge of an antecedent debt, but also of an enquiry productive of results which warranted his reasonably believing that such debt was a family obligation, and the sale or mortgage a prudent arrangement for its discharge. 202. ———————— Mortgage of joint family property—Powers of kurta—Acknowledgment by kurta or by executor under Hindu will —Acquiescence.—H, a Hindu, died leaving two adult and two minor sons, and having made a will or anumatipatra, addressed to his two eldest sons, L and G, whom he thereby appointed malik mukhtars of the whole of his estate with full powers of management. He directed them to maintain his widow and minor sons and to pay the marriage expenses of the latter out of the joint estate, and further directed them to pay his liabilities and, if necessary, to raise money for that purpose by sale or mortgage; the necessary documents to be signed by L and G, "the names of the infants being signed by you as guardians and executors." In case of the death of either L or G, the will provided that all the powers of the executors should be vested in the survivor; the minors to have the same powers upon attaining majority. The will further provided that the executors should, when the minors came of age, "make over to them with explanation the share of each;" and that the four sons should take the property in equal shares. L died after his father leaving a widow and having made a will, whereof he appointed G executor, and G subsequently obtained a certificate under s. 7, Act XL of 1858, in respect of the property of his minor brothers. Thereafter G, by a deed in the English form, which was executed by him alone "as executor of H" and also "as executor of L," mortgaged a portion of the property to the plaintiff to secure R6,847-3-3. Of this sum, R947-3-3 were advanced to G at the time of the mortgage, and were applied by him for the benefit of H's estate, R1,000 were advanced to pay a debt due from L to third persons, the remainder being in respect of debts of H, all of which, however, with the exception of one debt of R100, were barred by the law of limitation. In a suit by the mortgagee for an account and sale, or foreclosure of the mortgaged property, it appeared that one of the minors had attained his majority when the mortgage was executed, and the other some years thereafter, and that both had been informed of the mortgage several years before the suit, and had then raised no objections. No question as to the effect of the limitation law on the mortgage was raised on the pleadings or at the trial. Held by MARKBY, J., that, although the mortgage was not executed in accordance with the will of H, the younger sons had stood by and had taken the benefit of the transaction, and could not therefore question it. A member of a joint Hindu family is bound, when he comes of age, to make himself acquainted with the acts during his minority of the manager, and to express his dissent at once if he disapprove of such acts. No evidence having been offered as to L's estate when the mortgage was executed or that L's widow knew of the mortgage, the suit must be dismissed as against her. Held, on appeal, by COUCH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J., tha tdebts by Hindu law being a charge upon the estate of the debtor, and the intention of H, as shown by the provision in his will for the maintenance of his widow and minor sons, being that the family should for a time continue to be joint, no charge or trust was created by the clause in H's will for payment of his debts, and therefore the fact that in executing the mortgage G professed to act under the will and not as kurta did not invalidate the mortgage. For the same reason, the clause for payment of debts could not prevent the operation of the law of limitation. The manager of a joint Hindu family, or the executor of a Hindu will, has no power by acknowledgment to revive a debt barred by the law of limitation except as against himself. G as kurta of the joint family could not make a valid mortgage of L's share separately from the shares of the other members of the family; his estate therefore was liable to pay the plaintiff the R1,000 borrowed to pay L's debt, and his representatives could claim to be repaid from L's estate. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's application. In 1882 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant, in which he prayed for a decree giving him possession of the said room on the terms of the decree passed in 1877. The defendant alleged that the house in question was not the joint property of his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba, but that his father Sambhapa was the sole owner; that his uncles Sadoba and Raghoba and his brother Rajaram had no right to mortgage it, and that the money was not required for family necessity. He contended that the decree of 1877 was not binding on him, and, further, that the present suit was barred. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against the defendant. There was nothing to show that at the date of the mortgage in 1875 the defendant was not still a member of the same joint family with Rajaram into which he had been born. In the mortgage transaction all the branches of the family were represented by their eldest members, and the mortgagee (the plaintiff) might reasonably suppose that a transaction entered into by them and apparently necessary for the common interest was really necessary. 208. ———————— Polygar, Position and liabilities of—Debts incurred by—Acquisition of moveable property by—Assets in hands of successor—Duty of lender dealing with polygar.—Per KERNAN, J.—A simple loan and an express charge require the same foundation to bind the family and estate of a polygar. The position of a polygar differs from that of a manager of a Hindu family in this incident amongst others, viz., that primâ facie he borrows on his own personal credit (where there is no mortgage) and not on the credit of the family estate, and the rule requiring a lender to satisfy himself of the existence of family necessity or of the family benefit which justifies the manager in borrowing would not be sufficiently complied with by similar enquiries in the case of a polygar borrowing money. To entitle a creditor, obtaining a charge from a polygar on the corpus of the estate, to the security of the estate, proof of imminent pressure or danger of loss, or of such close enquiries as to the position of the estate and the immediate circumstances of the pressure or apprehended danger as to satisfy a prudent and reasonable mind of the truth of an alleged pressure and impending danger, should be given. Per Curiam—Although moneys lent by a creditor to a polygar have been actually expended in payment of paramount charges on the estate, the mere fact of such payments is no evidence of family necessity, nor can the estate be said to derive any benefit thereby, when the annual rents of the estate are more than sufficient to pay for all proper charges on the estate, so as to entitle the creditor to recover from the family estate. When a creditor has made no enquiry as to the necessity for a polygar borrowing money, he cannot remedy the omission by showing that if he had enquired he would have been informed that the money was wanted to pay for Government kist due by the polygar. Per KERNAN, J.—When the rightful owner of a polliam has stood by and allowed another to take and remain in possession of the polliam, and loans have been made to the de facto polygar, the moveable property, purchased by the de facto polygar out of the income or with borrowed moneys in his possession at his death, is assets available for payment of his creditors. Per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.—The moveable property acquired by means of the income of the polliam by a de facto polygar is not available as assets for his creditors in the hands of de jure polygar who succeeded him and who has not admitted his predecessor's title, nor accepted maintenance from him, but moveable property acquired by means of borrowed money may be pursued by the creditor as assets. 205. ——— Attachment and sale of the interest of manager where manager is not the father of other co-sharers—Tenants-in-common—N and H (uncle and nephew) were members of an undivided Hindu family. On the 22nd April 1872, N mortgaged the land in dispute (part of the family property) to J, who, on the 10th June 1876, obtained a decree against N on the mortgage, and put up the land for sale in execution. It was purchased by the defendant on the 26th October 1876. N and H had previously sold the land to the plaintiff by a registered deed, dated the 30th June 1876. On the 28th September 1877, the plaintiff sued the decree, and the interest of H therefore was not affected by the sale. He affirmed the decree of the first Court, with the variation that the plaintiff and defendant were jointly entitled to the possession of the land. In second appeal it was contended for the defendant that the District Judge ought to have found whether the mortgage-debt contracted by N was for a family necessity and therefore binding on N, and whether the sale to the plaintiff was bonâ fide. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. The defendant had only purchased that which was seized and sold in execution of the decree, viz., the right, title, and interest of N in the land, and H's share was not affected by the sale. Held also, following Maruti Narayan v. Lilachand, I. L. R., 6 Bom., 564, that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to consider the question whether the loan contracted by N in 1872 was contracted by him as manager for a necessary family purpose so as to bind the share of H in the property. Held also that, if the share of N had already been sold to the defendant under the mortgage-decree, the defendant and H were simply tenants-in-common, and there could be no object on to H doing what he liked with his remaining share. father died and D separated from his brother. At the time of separation D took nothing out of the family estate, which was very small. He subsequently supported himself by practising medicine, which he taught himself from some medical books which his father had bought for him before his death. D had two sons, viz., M, born in 1846, and H, born in 1849. At the end of the year 1850, D and his two sons came to Bombay, where D continued to practise medicine and established a dispensary. In 18 2, having saved R5,000 by his medical practice, he set up business as a merchant, and acquired a considerable fortune. His two sons, M and H, who were joint with him, assisted him in his business. On the 7th October 1882, M separated from his father and brother and received as his share of the property a sum of R6,000 and jewels and clothes worth about R5,000. On the same day M made his will, whereby he appointed his father D executor, and disposed of the whole of the portion of the property so allotted to him, directing that it should be invested and paid over to his son (the plaintiff) on his attaining majority; and, in the event of his dying without issue, that it should go to his (M's) brother, H (defendant No. 2). On the 16th October 1882, M died leaving the plaintiff, his son, him surviving. The plaintiff in this suit contended that the whole of the said property was ancestral property in the hands of M and as such came to him (the plaintiff) unaffected by the will. The defendants contended that the property previously to the division was the joint, but not the ancestral, property of M, his father, and brother; that it was property earned by the joint exertions of D and his sons; that at the division in October 1882, the portion taken by M was his self-acquired property; and that he was entitled to dispose of it by will. Held that whether, previously to the division in October 1882, the joint property of D and his two sons was ancestral or not, as soon as a portion of such joint property was divided off by the father (D) and given to his son M, it became ancestral in M's hands. For, assuming the truth of the defendants' story as to the mode in which the whole property was acquired, it could not be held that it was acquired by the equal exertions of the father and his two sons. The father contributed the nucleus of R5,000, and on that nucleus the property was formed by the joint exertions of himself and his sons. The portion, therefore, that came to M did not represent the equivalent of his own exertions only. It represented also a portion of the father's original capital. The property thus being ancestral in the hands of M, he could not, in the town of Bombay, dispose of it by will, even though it consisted of moveables, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's rights. 219. ———————— Mortgage by a father—Decree against father on mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs.—The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court,—Held that, under the decree passed against the father, the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable. Although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so, yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. This agreement was filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act on 4th April 1891, when it took effect as a decree. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to attach the property mortgaged. D having died in the meantime, his sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive. family mortgaged some land forming a portion of the ancestral estate. The mortgagee, having obtained a decree in 1856 on his mortgage, caused 20 gundas of the mortgaged land to be attached and sold, on account of the right and interest of one of the mortgagors only, on 24th January 1871. In a suit brought by the purchaser against a third member of the undivided family, in whose possession the 20 gundas then were, to recover the same from him, as being the property of the mortgagor, whose right and interest therein had been attached and sold,—Held that the share of a co-parcener, being in the estate as a whole and not in any particular part of it, can be ascertained only by taking a general account of the whole estate, and making a distribution in accordance with the results of such account. In taking such account, however, and in making the consequent distribution, it would be only equitable that the share of the co-parcener who affected to deal with a portion of the land as if empowered to mortgage it should, cœteris paribus, if the purchaser takes his place, be so made up as to embrace wholly, or so far as possible, the land which the purchaser bought as belonging to such co-parcener. Held also that to obtain possession of the land purchased by himself the purchaser must file against the other members of the family a partition suit for the ascertainment of the share of the co-parcener, whose interest he has purchased, as it stood in 1848, and for the allotment to himself of that share so far as it can legally and equitably be identified with the land purchased by himself, and that consequently the suit in its present form will not lie. An attempted mortgage by one of them does not create a charge which can have priority over purchases at execution-sales made boná fide and without notice of it; such purchasers having acquired the right of compelling the partition which the debtor might have compelled, had he been so minded, before the alienation by the sale of his share. As to the invalidity of the attempted mortgage, Sadabart Prasad Sahu v. Foolbash Koer, 3 B. L. R., F. B., 31, referred to and approved. As to the right of the purchaser of the share at a judicial sale, Deen Dayal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 198 : L. R., 4 I. A., 247, followed, and reference made to the distinction mentioned in the latter case, between a voluntary alienation without such consent and an involuntary one as the result of the execution of a decree against the co-partner and a judicial sale thereunder. A father and son composed a joint family, holding a share of ancestral lands. The son mortgaged to a banker, to secure a loan, his interest in the undivided share. His father, without having notice of the mortgage, purchased in good faith portions of the estate forming part of the son's joint share at sales in execution of decrees against the latter obtained by his creditors. Held that the son's interest in the portions so sold passed to the father, whose rights therein as purchaser at the judicial sales were not affected by the mortgage. The mortgagee could, in execution of a money-decree which he might obtain against the mortgagor, personally attach and bring to a judicial sale such parts of the mortgaged property as had not already been sold, but not in virtue of the mortgage. As soon as partition is made —actual partition not being in all cases essential, as, for instance, where the family has agreed to hold their estate in definite shares, or a member's undivided share, in execution of his creditor's decree, has been attached—that will be regarded as sufficient to support the alienation of a member's interest, as if it had been his acquired property. In a suit for ejectment by the vendor's co-parceners, who were minors at the time and had not joined in the sale, it was held that there had been no legal necessity for the sale, which was accordingly declared to be not binding on the plaintiffs. It was, however, found that a portion of the consideration had been applied to the discharge of a mortgage debt, which would have been also binding on the plaintiffs. On its being contended that plaintiffs' interest in the property comprised in the sale should be held liable to the extent of their share of the mortgage debt. Held that in making the purchase defendant was, with reference to plaintiffs, a mere volunteer, and could not as against them claim by way of equity a charge on their shares, even though part of the consideration had been applied towards the discharge of their joint debt; also that, if a purchaser wishes to stand by a sale which is only partially valid, he must be content with the vendor's share; and that, if he wishes to repudiate the transaction altogether, his only remedy is by suit against the vendor for the return of the price paid on the ground that the consideration for the same has failed. affected by sale in execution of a decree against his father—Parties to suit.—A family, governed by Mitakshara law, carrying on a trade in the names of some of its members, having become indebted to the defendants in a large amount in respect of advances made for the purposes of the trade, some of the head members of the family executed a bond in favour of the defendants for the amount due, and hypothecated certain family properties which stood in their names as collateral security therefor. The amount not having been paid on the due date, the defendants brought a suit on the bond against the persons who had executed it, and obtained a decree which, however, did not direct that the properties hypothecated should be sold. In execution of that decree, the interest of the judgment-debtors in the hypothecated properties, and in other family properties, were sold, and were purchased by the defendants, who subsequently, under their purchase, obtained possession of the shares of the judgment-debtors and of those of their sons. The decree not having been satisfied by those sales, the defendants brought a suit against the remaining head members of the family to have it declared that their interests in the family properties were liable to satisfy the decree, and that suit also was decreed. Under the last decree, the interests in the family properties of the judgment-debtors under that decree were sold, and were purchased by the defendants who subsequently obtained possession of the shares of those judgment-debtors and of the shares of their sons. Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both decrees were adult at the time when the suits were instituted. entertained the question as between the sons and the creditor of the father "whether the attachment of the rest of the family property specified in the plaint ought not, in respect of plaintiff's shares, to be cancelled," and decided it in favour of the creditor on the ground that the debt had been contracted for purposes binding on the family, and further decided that the property so under attachment ought to be sold to discharge the debt, and it was sold accordingly. Subsequently to the decree for partition, and when the defendants were divided from their father, S D (who was the sole judgment-debtor in suit No. 28 of 1871), the house and lands now in issue, which formed no part of the property mortgaged for the debt, the subject of suit No. 28 of 1871, were attached and sold and bought by the father of the present plaintiffs. The question in the present suits was whether the properties last mentioned, not having been attached in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, and not therefore being any of those specifically affected in favour of the creditor by the decree in suit No. 33 of 1872, were liable as part of the joint family property, under the declarations of the judgment in that suit, to discharge the debt due to the creditor of the father by the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871. Held on this question by the High Court (MORGAN, C.J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, JJ.), affirming the decree of the Court of first instance, that these properties were not so liable; that under the decree and execution-proceedings in suit No. 28 of 1871 merely the rights of S D were sold; that nothing in that litigation indicated that it was intended to enforce the debt against the whole property as a debt due from the family, and that the decision in the partition suit (No. 33 of 1872) covered only what was then in question, and could not be viewed as authorizing the attachment of the items of property now in question in execution of that decree. That the present suits were therefore rightly dismissed. By INNES, J.—That the prayer of the plaintiffs (the sons) in suit No. 33 of 1872, so far as it related to the removal of the attachment in execution of the decree in suit No. 28 of 1871, should have been at once granted. That the creditor in suit No. 28 of 1871 had elected to sue the father alone, and that, though it might have been open to him (the creditor) to have so framed his suit as to have obtained a decree making the joint family liable in persons and property, having failed to do so, he could not afterwards seek to extend the operation of the decree beyond the proper and limited scope of it; and that the Court, in trying the question of the liability of the sons to discharge the debt due to the first defendant's creditor, in effect instituted against them a new suit. Deendyal Lal v. *Jugdeep Narain Singh, I. The creditor having brought a suit to have it declared that the shares released from attachment were liable to be sold for the amount due under the decree against C, and having proved that the debt was incurred by the managing member for purposes which would render it binding on the defendants,—Held that the suit must nevertheless be dismissed. Prior to that suit, the attached property had been sold, but the sale was limited to the right, title and interest of the father in the joint property; however, in suit No. 33 of 1872, the Court, having decreed a partition, further the plaintiff's claim to be regarded as a mortgagee of the entire property could not be allowed. The temporary absence of his father, H, owing to the pressure of his creditors, could confer no legal authority on J to take upon himself to mortgage the family property. He had not been authorized by his father, nor did he assume to act for him when he mortgaged the property. The mortgage to the plaintiff was therefore to be regarded as the act of J in his individual capacity, and as such could receive no ratification by the mere reticence of his father. The plaintiff, however, having been in possession, was entitled, if he could establish his title to a lien on J's share, to be put into possession jointly with the defendant if the latter's title was proved. 282. ——————— Liability of ancestral estate for separate debt of deceased co-parcener.—Undivided family property is not, in the hands of surviving co-parceners, generally speaking, liable to separate debts of a deceased co-parcener. Where therefore a Hindu, undivided in estate from his father, died separately indebted to the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree against the father and wife of the deceased, as his legal heirs and representatives, to recover, from the estate and effects of the deceased, the amount of their debt and costs, and sought, in satisfaction of the decree, to attach a shop which during the lifetime of the deceased and subsequently to his death had been in the possession of his father, there being no proof of any separate estate of the deceased having devolved upon his father,—Held that, though the son was, during his life, jointly interested with his father in the shop as being ancestral property, his right had come into existence at his birth and died with him, and therefore the plaintiffs could not render the shop available for their claim. In the Bombay Presidency, the share of one of the co-parceners in a Hindu undivided family in the ancestral estate may, before partition, be seized and sold in execution for his separate debt in his lifetime. Such a co-parcener cannot, however, by simple voluntary gift or by devise, alienate his share to a stranger, so as to bind his surviving co-parceners after his decease. The purchaser, mortgagee, or other alienee, for valuable consideration, of such an unascertained share, cannot, before partition, insist upon the possession of any particular portion of the undivided family estate. The mortgagee or purchaser of a share in the undivided ancestral estate of a Hindu family takes such share subject to the prior charges or encumbrances affecting the family estate or that particular share. If the mortgage or sale be of a special portion of the family property, and possession of such portion can, on partition, be given to the mortgagee or purchaser, without injustice to prior encumbrancers or to co-parceners, it is the duty of the Court making the partition to give effect to the mortgage or sale, and so to marshall the family property among the co-parceners as to allot that portion, or so much of it as may be just, to the mortgagee or purchaser. Quære—Whether, in the event of it being impossible, consistently with the rights of others, to give possession of the portion mortgaged or sold to the mortgagee or purchaser, he would be entitled to be recouped out of such other portion as might, on partition, be allotted to the parcener whose share in the special portion had been mortgaged or sold. The attachment of a parcener's share in the family property under an ordinary money-decree should go against the share, right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in such parts of the family property (naming and describing them) as the judgment-creditor can specify, and against his share, right, title, and interest in all other parts of the family property. Kalyanbhai v. Motiram Jamnadas, 10 Bom., 378; Vasudev Bhat v. Venkatesh Sanbhav, 10 Bom., 139; and Fakirappa v. Chanappa, 10 Bom., 162, commented on and distinguished. Goor Pershad v. *Sheodin, 4 N. 297. ——— Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family, under the Mitakshara, cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title, and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. The plaintiff was a minor at the time of the sale, and B was not the managing member of the family. Held that the Court-sale was binding on the plaintiff's share. Nanomi Babuasin v. *Modhun Mohun, L. The points to be determined in such case are—(1) What was the interest that was bargained for and paid for by the purchaser? Was it the father's interest only, or was it the interest of the entire family? (2) Were the debts for which the decrees were obtained, under which the property was sold, contracted for immoral purposes? and (3) Had the purchaser notice that the debts were so contracted? Suraj Bunsi Koer v. *Sheo Proshad Singh, L. The plaintiff sued in 1883 for partition of ancestral property, consisting (inter alia) of certain thikans which had been sold in execution of decrees passed against his father. The plaintiff, though an adult at the time, was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were passed against the father, nor to the execution-proceedings. The judgment-debtor was a member of an undivided family; his son put in no claim in execution, but on a claim put in by his nephew it was ordered that the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor be sold. The decree-holder became the purchaser, and having obtained a sale certificate which recited that "all the interest of the judgment-debtor" was sold, he was put in possession of all the land part of which he leased to the son. Subsequently, the nephew obtained a decree for his share against the decree-holder and then purchased the rest of the land from him. In a suit by the son against the nephew to recover his share, the plaintiff having failed to prove that the judgment-debt had been incurred for purposes not binding on him,—Held that the entire estate less the interest of the nephew was sold to the decree-holder, and consequently the son's interest had passed to him. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a partition of their five-sixths share of the thikans sold, alleging that they were not bound by the Court-sale, as they were not parties to the khot's suit against their brother or to the execution-proceedings. Held that, the assessment for which the khot obtained a decree against E being due by the whole family, the sale in execution passed the shares of the plaintiffs, as well as that of their brother, to the auction-purchasers. Daulat Ram v. *Mehr Chand, I. She also claimed arrears of maintenance for six years prior to the institution of the suit. The Court of first instance passed a decree in her favour awarding her maintenance at the rate of R52 a year during her lifetime, but "subject to variation according to the change in defendants' circumstances for the worse." The Court also awarded her arrears of maintenance for three years only (not six as claimed) on the ground that she was only twenty years old, and had always lived with her father and been maintained by him, and that a formal demand had only been made on the defendants three years previously. On appeal, the District Court increased the rate of maintenance to R65 per annum, and awarded the plaintiff arrears of six years, holding that the fact of the demand having been made only three years before suit did not prevent her from recovering arrears for six years. Held by the High Court that, although the withholding of maintenance, which constituted the cause of action, might be proved otherwise than by a demand and refusal, yet in this case it had not been shown that there were any circumstances which would amount to a refusal of maintenance. The decree of the lower Appeal Court was therefore, confirmed, except so far as it gave the plaintiff arrears of maintenance for six years, which period was altered to three years. 60. ——————— Right to maintenance of illegitimate member of joint family—Suit by legitimate son of illegitimate member of family to redeem mortgage made by legitimate member—Right of redemption.—An allowance for maintenance was received by the plaintiff's father, that father having been an illegitimate son born to a collateral relation of the head of a family. The ancestral property was in the possession of the latter, who was in a senior line of descent. The plaintiff, who was himself the legitimate son of his father, claimed to be entitled to redeem a mortgage of part of the ancestral estate, that mortgage having been effected by the above-mentioned head of the family. His ground of claim was that he had inherited the right to maintenance and had thus an interest of charge within the meaning of s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1884, to entitle him to redeem. Held by the High Court,—the right of an illegitimate son in a Hindu family to receive maintenance from the family property is a purely personal right, and does not descend to his son. The legitimate son of an illegitimate member of a Hindu family who as such illegitimate son might have had a right to maintenance from the property of his father, had no such interest in the estate belonging to the family as would entitle him to redeem a mortgage made by a previous rightful and legitimate owner of the estate. Held by the Privy Council in appeal,—in the regenerate classes of Hindus a son of illegitimate birth has no part in the family inheritance, but is entitled to maintenance out of his father's estate—a right personal to him and not inherited by his offspring. Chuoturya Run Murdun Syn v. Sahub Purhulad Syn, 7 Moore's I. A., 18, referred to and followed. Held also that the High Court had rightly concluded that the plaintiff had not inherited that right. The authority of the Mitakshara in Ch. I, ss. 11 and 12, was more consistent with a personal right of the illegitimate son. ROSHAN SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH

62. ——————— Maintenance of mother on partition between her son and step-sons. A widowed mother, on a partition taking place between her son and her step-sons of the property left by her husband, is not entitled to have the whole property charged with her maintenance, but only that portion of it which is allotted to her son on the partition. A separation in food and worship took place between a Hindu widow, her son, and her two step-sons, after which the widow lived as a member of her son's family and was maintained by him. A partition of the moveable property having been made, a suit was brought by the son against the step-sons for partition of the immoveable property, and a decree was made defining the shares of the parties therein. That suit was brought and decreed pending a suit by the widow against her son and step-sons for maintenance from the date of the separation, and for fixing her future maintenance, in which suit she sought to have the maintenance charged on the whole estate left by her husband. Held that, from the separation to the decree in the partition suit, the widow was entitled to maintenance charged on the whole estate, and subsequently to the decree to a charge on her son's share only. But, inasmuch as she had during the former period been maintained by her son, and could not claim maintenance over again from her step-sons, whatever claim her son might have against them for contribution for her maintenance during that time, the suit as against them must be dismissed. Where the annual value of the whole estate was found to be R70,000 and the proportionate annual value of her son's portion was R23,333, R150 a month was held under the circumstances to be a suitable maintenance. 108. ———— Right to select residence.—By the Hindu common law the right of a widow to maintenance is one accruing from time to time according to her want and exigencies. A statute of limitation might do much harm if it should force widows to claim their strict rights and commence litigation which, but for the purpose of keeping alive their claim, would not be necessary or desirable. In a suit brought by the widow against the eldest son for maintenance, it was pleaded that under the will of the husband it was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to maintenance that she should live under the same roof and in joint family with the defendant. It was further pleaded that there having been no demand and refusal of maintenance the plaintiff had no cause of action. Held that there was no condition in the will making the plaintiff's right to maintenance dependent upon her living under the same roof with the defendant, and that she was therefore left in the ordinary position of a Hindu widow, in whose [illegible] from the ancestral home would not [illegible] her to maintenance suitable to her rank and position. 112. ———— Suit against father-in-law—Defence that plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will—Effect of direction in husband's will that widow should reside in family house.—The plaintiff, after the death of her husband A, sued her father-in-law for maintenance. A, although not adopted, had always been treated by his maternal grandfather N as his son. They lived together, and after N's death, in 1873, A and his wife (the plaintiff) continued to live occasionally with N's widow M. A died in 1876 without issue, leaving the plaintiff, his widow, who was then a minor of the age of fourteen. A left a will and appointed M his executrix. In his will he spoke of himself as the adopted son of N (which he was not), and he purported by it to dispose of N's property. He bequeathed ornaments of the value of R2,000 to his wife, and he directed that, if she resided in the house of his father (the defendant) or in the house of M, she should be paid R10 a month as maintenance by M; but if she went to live elsewhere, that only R7 a month should be paid to her. M proved the will. In 1879 the plaintiff left M's house and went to live with her mother; and in 1889 she filed this suit against her father-in-law, the defendant, for maintenance. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was provided for by her husband's will, and further that the plaintiff had failed to obey her husband's direction to reside either in M's house or the defendant's house, and that therefore she was not entitled to a separate maintenance. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to enforce her claim under her husband's will in lieu of claiming maintenance from her father-in-law. In answer to plaintiff's claim, the defendant was bound to show that she was possessed of property out of which she could maintain herself, and he did not discharge that onus by showing that by suing M she might possibly recover the maintenance provided for her by the will. Held also that the plaintiff was entitled to separate maintenance from the defendant. The general rule of law is that a Hindu widow is not bound to reside in her deceased husband's family house and does not forfeit her right to maintenance out of her husband's estate by going to reside elsewhere, unless she goes elsewhere for an improper purpose. Quære—Whether that rule applies if she goes to reside elsewhere notwithstanding a direction in

After the husband's death, she is entitled to follow such property in the hands of her step-sons to recover her maintenance her right to which is not affected by any agreement made by her with her husband in his lifetime. All ancestral property is, while it remains undisposed of and unpartitioned, charged with the maintenance of all persons who are entitled to maintenance from the estate. Immoveable property purchased with the capital or profits of ancestral moveable property does not retain the character of ancestral moveable property, but those incidents attach to it which ordinarily attach to immoveable property acquired by and inherited from an ancestor. A Hindu widow with a minor son is as much entitled as a childless widow to maintenance. Where a husband dies leaving separate estates and also an undivided share in joint family property, the widow's maintenance should be met first out of the profits of the separate estates; but if these are insufficient, there is nothing in the circumstance that the husband left separate estates which would debar the widow from having recourse to the joint estate to meet the deficiency. can be made against the purchaser of a portion of the joint property. If the widow, on the other hand, is not accepting support from the co-parcener, if she lives apart, and if the estate is small and insufficient, it is the vendee's duty, before purchasing, to enquire into the reason for the sale, and not by a clandestine transaction to prevent the widow from asserting her right against the intending vendor. It is in this connection that the doctrine of notice becomes of importance. The knowledge of collateral rights created by agreement in equity frequently qualifies those acquired by a purchaser. The widow's right to maintenance is a right maintainable against the holders of the ancestral estate in virtue of their holding no less through the operation of the law than if it had been created by agreement, and so when the sale prevents its being otherwise satisfied, it accompanies the property as a burden annexed to it in the hands of a vendee with notice that it subsists, though equity as between the vendee and the vendor will make the property retained by the latter primarily answerable. Whether such a claim by a widow against the estate of her deceased husband in the hands of a purchaser is enforceable or not, does not depend upon whether the remainder of the estate in the hands of the heir has been exhausted. What was honestly purchased is free from her claim for ever. What was purchased in furtherance of a fraud upon her, or with knowledge of a right which would thus be prejudiced, is liable to her claim from the first. The relations of the parties are determined once for all at the moment of the sale. There is no authority for the doctrine which makes the claim of widows not entitled to a share of property, in case of partition, a real charge on the inheritance, and ranks the claim of widows who are so entitled as a mere moral obligation. In all cases it is a claim to maintenance merely, not interfering (so long as it has not been reduced to certainty by a legal transaction) with the right of the actually participant members to deal with the property at their discretion, provided this dealing is honest and for the common benefit. The reduction of the number of surviving co-parceners to a single person makes no difference in the widow's legal position. The rights and obligations of the original co-parceners fall at last to the sole survivor. The widows must be maintained by him out of the property, but he may still deal with the estate at his discretion in the absence of actual fraud or of a decree which has converted some widow's claim into an actual right in re. The purchaser from him takes a perfectly good title, and one which, if good at the time, cannot be impaired by subsequent changes in the circumstances of the vendor's family. 5. ———— Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Husband and wife—Suit by the father to declare such marriage void—Factum valet.—The plaintiff, a Hindu father, sued for a declaration that the marriage of his daughter, which had been celebrated by his wife without his consent, was null and void. It appeared that the plaintiff had for about eight years voluntarily given up residence with his wife and daughters, and that he had several times been requested by his wife to get their daughter, aged eleven years, married, but had neglected to do so. The plaintiff's wife accordingly, having procured a suitable husband for their daughter, informed the plaintiff of the intended marriage; but the plaintiff, instead of approving the course taken by his wife, filed a suit, and obtained an injunction restraining his wife from celebrating the marriage. The marriage nevertheless was solemnized with due ceremonies. The Court of first instance declared the marriage void. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, —Held, confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the marriage should be supported, under the circumstances of the case, on the principle of factum valet, there being no express authority in the Hindu law-texts, making the consent of the parents and guardians of a girl a condition precedent to the validity of a marriage. The plaintiff, having been informed of his wife's intention to marry their daughter, made no bonâ fide attempt to marry her, and, after entirely foregoing his claim to all control over his daughter for many years, merely attempted to assert his right without any regard to her interests, and with the sole object of annoying the mother, from whom he had been long separated with his own consent. Quære—Whether Civil Courts would set aside a marriage if a clear case was established of fraud, by both the parties intermarrying, on the rights of the father as guardian of his daughter for the purposes of marriage. In 1877 a daughter S had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter S. R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters—demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendants, complaining that they were about to have his daughter S married to her cousin without his (the plaintiff's) consent. He prayed that he might be declared entitled to the custody of his daughter, and for an injunction against her marriage without his consent. On filing this suit, he obtained a rule nisi for an injunction against the defendants. Held that, pending the hearing of this suit, he was entitled to the injunction asked for. The lower Court had granted the injunction. Held that s. 12 of the Guardian and Wards Act authorizes the Court to make such order for the temporary protection of the person of the minor as it thinks proper, and this power is not exercisable only after the production of the minor. Held, further, that the mere fact that a person resides outside the jurisdiction of the Court is not per se sufficient to prevent the Court from granting an injunction to restrain him from committing an act in a case such as the present. Held also that this was not a case in which the High Court ought to interfere under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiff had declined this offer. 14. ———— Suit against father of betrothed girl to have betrothal declared void and for damages for breach of contract—Contract of marriage—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter K, sued for a declaration that, unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Baisakh 1952 (May-June 1896), the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff, and that the betrothal was void, and for R25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. The defendant pleaded that his daughter K was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaint assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus pœnitentiæ until Baisakh 1952. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Baisakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. 12 ———— Betrothal, Suit to enforce—Ceremonies of betrothal —The plaintiff, on behalf of her infant son sued the father and guardian of M B to recover possession of M B, alleging that M B had been betrothed to her son, and that under the Hindu law, betrothment was the same as marriage and could not be repudiated, and that the defendant had, on demand refused to give up M B The defendant pleaded, inter alia that the betrothment had been repudiated, as the family to which the plaintiff belonged were guilty of female infanticide and that it would be illegal, under the Hindu law to enter into relationship with it Held that, as according to Hindu law a betrothment is effected by the bride and bridegroom walking seven steps hand in hand during a particular recital and the contract is perfected upon their arriving at the seventh step, and may be enforced by the husband on completion of the time, and as the evidence adduced did not show, nor was it alleged or pretended that any betrothment had been effected or perfected in the way above described, the suit was unmaintainable NOWBUT SINGH v LAD KOOER 5 N. 13 Breach of promise of marriage—Reciprocal contingent contract Damages —Upariyaman—Halai Bhatia caste The plaintiffs alleged that by a written agreement, dated the 18th March 1882, the first defendant and her deceased son L agreed that the second defendant K, who was the daughter of the first defendant should be given in marriage to the second plaintiff who was the son of plaintiff No. 1 and that the marriage of these two persons to take place accordingly The agreement was executed by the said L as eldest male member of his family, in the name of his deceased father In pursuance of this agreement, the plaintiffs paid to the first defendant R700 as upariyaman, and they presented K with ornaments and clothes of considerable value The plaintiffs complained that the first defendant subsequently refused to carry out the contract of marriage, and had married her daughter K (defendant No 2) to another person They claimed in this suit to recover the ornaments and clothes, together with the R700 paid to the first defendant as upariyaman and R10,000 as damages The first defendant was sued both in her personal capacity and as heir and legal representative of her son L The first defendant pleaded that neither she nor the second defendant were bound by the [illegible] agreement as they were not parties to it; that the contract had been a contingent contract, [illegible] as her son L had agreed to give K (defendant No [illegible]) in marriage to the second plaintiff only on condition that he (L) should obtain in marriage C, the daughter of the third plaintiff, and that L and C were accordingly betrothed, that L had died in 1884 [illegible]

that the contract had been thereby determined; that she had been willing to renew it, and had proposed that a younger son of hers (J) should be accepted as the husband of U, but that the plaintiff had declined this offer. In proof of her allegation that the contract was a reciprocal contingent contract, the first defendant relied upon the following clause in the agreement: "At the time when the marriages are to take place the marriages of the two girls are to be performed together. When you shall give your daughter in marriage, I also am at the same time to give my daughter in marriage." Held that the agreement of betrothal was not a reciprocal contingent contract; and that the first defendant had committed a breach of the agreement by not giving her daughter K in marriage to the second plaintiff; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the first defendant the value of the ornaments and the R700 paid by the plaintiffs as upariyaman together with R600 damages for the breach of contract. 14. ———— Suit against father of betrothed girl to have betrothal declared void and for damages for breach of contract—Contract of marriage—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter K, sued for a declaration that, unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Baisakh 1952 (May-June 1896), the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff, and that the betrothal was void, and for R25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. The defendant pleaded that his daughter K was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial K stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. K was born on the 2nd May 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January 1896). Before filing the suit, the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time, and that he would not force her to marry against her will. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal, and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaint assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus pœnitentiæ until Baisakh 1952. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry K at any time before the end of Baisakh did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that K had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. It would be extremely inconvenient to hold that by a deprivation of caste, which may be temporary, a member of a caste loses his marital rights, so as to confer on his wife the power of contracting a second marriage. 6 EVIDENCE AS TO, AND PROOF OF, MARRIAGE

45. ———— Evidence of marriage—Inference and probabilities weighed against direct testimony —Upon a widow's claim for maintenance the question was whether the relation between her and a person, deceased many years before her suit, whom she alleged to have been her husband, had been the relation of marriage or of concubinage The decision of this question, one way or the other, rested on considerations whether the substantial testimony of witnesses who gave their testimony to the fact of the marriage in their presence, was, or was not, outweighed and negatived in judicial estimation by the antecedent and inherent improbability that such a marriage, under the circumstances of the parties alleged to have entered into it would have taken place The oral evidence was however, corroborated by inferences drawn from several facts well established The present suit was defended by the successor in estate of the deceased and it was common ground between this defendant and the plaintiff that there had been cohabitation between the deceased and the latter This narrowed the effect of the condition and circumstances of the deceased at the time of the alleged marriage upon the question whether it was a fact The ordinary criteria afforded by conduct contributed but little aid to remove doubt In the result, the conclusion of the Judicial Committee was that the direct oral testimony had not been overborne, but should prevail against the improbability presented by the case that such a marriage should have taken place The affirmative of it was maintained, and the widow's claim allowed LUCHMI KOER v ROOHU NATH DAS I L R, 27 Calc., 971

10. ———— Effect of deed as creating or not creating partition.—A, the son of a deceased zamindar, sued B and C, his widow and brother, for possession of the zamindari, which was impartible. In order to prove that C was divided from the late zamindar, A filed and proved a deed of partition executed by them in respect of their moveable property and of a house, which concluded as follows: "There shall be connection only by relationship, but there shall be no pecuniary connection between us." Held that the deed effected only a partial partition, and that the last clause must be referred to the co-parcener's right in partible property described in the instrument, and did not operate as a release of any right of succession to impartible property. 11. ———— Effect of agreement to divide.—To constitute a partition, there need not be an actual partition by metes and bounds. An agreement to divide is sufficient to constitute partition. Two brothers drew up a memorandum of partition, whereby they agreed to divide the family property in equal shares, and provided that, if at any future time their sons did not agree and there were any partition, they should exercise ownership in accordance with this document; neither was to take more than was mentioned in the document. Held that this agreement constituted a partition between the brothers, and was binding on their descendants. 15. ———— Partition effected without taking into account a minor co-parcener—Invalid partition.—A partition effected without reserving any share for a minor member of the family and without the consent of some one authorized to act on his behalf is invalid as against the minor. Three brothers, S, L, and K, were members of a joint Hindu family. In 1862, S and L divided the whole of the family property between them without reserving any share for their brother K, who was then a minor. K lived with L as a member of his family. L died in 1867, leaving a childless widow, with whom K continued to live till his death in 1876. K left an infant son (the plaintiff), only a year old. Subsequently S died in 1887, leaving two widows without issue. In 1889 the plaintiff, being still a minor, sued by his next friend to recover either the whole or one-third of the family property in the possession of the widows of L and S. The principal defences to this suit were (1) that it was time-barred, and (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim more than one-third of the property in suit. Held that the partition made by S and L in 1862 was invalid, as it was made without reserving any share for their minor brother K and without taking him into account. K's son was therefore entitled to recover the whole of the ancestral property as the sole surviving male member of the family. brother, to be zamindar of P. This instrument recited that by the death of R, his uncle, without male issue, V had become entitled to succeed to his estates, unless R's widow, then pregnant, should be delivered of a son. The instrument then provided that, in the event of the said widow giving birth to a son, V should retain the zamindari P, but that, if she gave birth to a daughter, V and his offspring should have no interest in the said zamindari, of which M should be sole zamindar, allowing maintenance to C, the third brother. R's widow gave birth to a daughter. V entered on possession of R's estates, and M took over the zamindari P. C died without issue. M died in 1835, and was succeeded by his only son D, who died in 1861, leaving a widow, but no sons. In a suit instituted in 1873 by S, a son of V, to recover certain villages belonging to the zamindari P from defendants in possession and claiming as purchasers for value from D.—Held by the Judicial Committee, reversing the judgments of the Courts below, that the instrument of 1829 was a renunciation by V for himself and his descendants of all interest in P, either as the head or as a junior member of the joint family, and that its effect was to make P, with its incidents of impartibility and peculiar course of succession, the property of the brothers M and C, as effectually as if, in the case of an ordinary partition between the elder brother on the one hand and the two younger brothers on the other, a particular property had been assigned to the latter: and that consequently, as between D and the defendants of V, the zamindari was the separate property of the former, whose rights, if he left any undisposed of, passed on his death to his widow, notwithstanding the undivided status of the family, in accordance with the rule of succession affirmed in the Shivagunga case, 9 *Moore's I. 26. ———————— Evidence of separation—Definement of shares in ancestral property.—A four-anna ancestral share in a zamindari village was owned by two brothers in which the share of H, son of one of the brothers, was one-half, the remaining half being the share of the plaintiffs, the descendants of the other brother. In the village records there had been a definement of shares followed by entries of separate interest in the revenue records, and since 1264 Fasli the two plaintiffs had each been recorded as the owner of a one-anna share and H of a two-anna share thereof. The entire four-anna share had been in the possession of mortgagees from the year 1844 excepting the sir lands of which H held separately his own share, viz., 10 bighas. On the 7th July 1883, H executed a deed of gift of his two-anna share in favour of the defendants and caused mutation of names to be made in their favour, surrendering to them at the same time possession of the sir land. H died on 21st January 1884, leaving neither son, widow, nor daughter, and the plaintiffs were his heirs-at-law. They brought this suit to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the sir land from the defendants. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance, and on appeal the District Judge affirmed the decree, holding that the four-anna share was not joint and undivided property between the co-sharers, and that H was in separate possession of the two-anna share of which the defendants were the donees. On second appeal it was contended that, inasmuch as since 1844 there could have been no separate enjoyment of the four-anna share which was in the possession of the mortgagees, the evidence afforded by separate registration could not prove actual separation. Held that from evidence of definement of shares followed by entries of separate interest in the revenue records, if there be nothing to explain it, separation as to estate may be inferred. Joint family property in the hands of mortgagees may be separated in estate, although there could be no separate enjoyment of the shares so separated. Ambika Dat v. Sukhmani Kuar, *I. L. It becomes obligatory by the will of the father as regulated and restrained by the law, irrespective of the consent of the sons. When a father having five sons, three by one wife and two by another, executed in his last illness a document whereby, after retaining a small portion for himself, he directed that the family property should be divided into three-fifths and two-fifths shares, with the manifest intention that from the date of the execution of the document it should operate as a severance (1) of the interest of his sons by one wife from that of his sons by the other, and (2) of the interest of all his sons from his own during his life; but neither the guardian of the infant sons nor the eldest son, who was of age, were parties to the instrument,—Held that this was not a will, but a partition; that it was competent to the father thus to alter the status of his sons; that the question was whether the transaction was bonâ fide and in conformity with Hindu law, and not one of contract as in the case of a partition between brothers. The minor died, and in 1897 his widow, S, as his heir, applied for execution of the decree, claiming seventy maunds of paddy, being the amount due at the rate specified in the decree. It was objected that she was not entitled to execute, inasmuch as the decree had not effected a partition, and that the property at his death still remained joint family property, which passed to the male survivors of the family, and that she was only entitled to maintenance. Held that the effect of the decree was to make the applicant's husband a divided member of his family. It awarded him a one-sixth share of the family estate, and assigned to him a separate allowance. The mere fact that it postponed the actual possession of the share until he had attained the age of twenty-one years made no difference. The right of an individual member to claim another partition was therefore negatived. The parties, who had long discontinued joint residence, were members of a family consisting at the time of the distribution of four sons left by a Sikh Dewan, deceased. The son of one brother now claimed from the son of another, joining a third who still survived, partition of the property which had descended from the grandfather, with the increment since his time. There being no evidence on the record to show when and by what member of the family certain property in the possession of a particular branch of the family was acquired, and the entry in the survey records with respect to it being different from that of the ancestral fields, that is, the entry being in the name of the representative of that particular branch with no sub-division of shares, and the party seeking partition of such property having failed to give evidence to rebut the presumption arising from the sole enjoyment of the particular branch and the entry in the survey records. Held that such property was the separate acquisition of that particular branch. Moro v. Ganesh, 10 Bom., 444; Appoovier v. *Rama Subba Aiyan, 11 Moore's I. 88. ——— Inheritance of talukhdari estate in Oude—Sanad recognizing primogeniture, Effect of, as to existing rights of inheritance —Shares held by members of family—Mesne profits on specific and definite shares.—The ordinary rule is that, if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate, they may have partition. Although in a suit for the partition of joint family estate, where the head of the joint family does not account for the profits under the ordinary Hindu law, mesne profits are not recoverable, it is not so where the family has been living under a clear agreement that the members are entitled not as an ordinary Hindu family, but in specific and definite shares. If the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed, the right to sue for profits will arise, as well as the right to partition. A talukhdari estate which, before and after annexation, was subject to the common Hindu law of Oude, viz., the Mitakshara, was restored after the general confiscation of 1858 to the family, which received a sanad recognizing the shares of its members. At the same time, a grant was made to the head of the family as talukhdar of two other villages, and to him afterwards in 1861 was issued a primogeniture sanad of the above talukhdari estate. This sanad could not prevail against the family rights of inheritance; and effect was given to family arrangements, with the same results as regards the two villages. On the contention that the family, by the effect of the sanads, was to have one head and sole manager in the talukhdar, who being accountable to the junior members for their shares of the profits was alone to hold the entire estate by primogeniture,—Held that this kind of managership was entirely unknown to the common Hindu law of Oude; and that apparently the Oude Estate Act, 1869, did not contemplate any such thing. At all events, there must be clear arrangements, such as were not found here, to establish and prove its existence. Partition was accordingly decreed to the members of the family suing for it. Pirthi Pal Sing v. *Jawahir Singh, L. R., 14 I. A., 37 : I. L. 98. ——— Purchaser from member of undivided Hindu family of share in the joint property.—Two brothers constituted an undivided Hindu family. The eldest mortgaged half of certain family lands to P and the other half to the father (since deceased) of the contending defendants, and placed the mortgagees respectively in possession. Neither mortgage was binding on the younger brother who mortgaged his share of the same land to the plaintiff. The plaintiff obtained a decree on his mortgage and attached and brought to sale in execution and himself purchased the half share of his mortgagor, and, having afterwards purchased the share of the elder brother and come to a settlement with P, brought a suit for a moiety of the land in the possession of the contending defendants as forming part of the half share of his mortgagor. Held that the contest being between strangers to the family, and the plaintiff having purchased the entire rights of the family in the land in question, the suit was maintainable without a claim for partition of the whole property of the family. 101. ——— Alienation of share by co-parcener—His position and rights after such alienation—Position and rights of purchaser—Subsequent birth or death of other co-parceners.—The alienation by a Hindu co-parcener of his rights in part or the whole of the joint family property does not place the purchaser of such rights in his own position. The purchaser becomes a sort of tenant-in-common with the co-parceners, admissible as such to his distributive share upon a partition taking place. Such an alienation before partition does not deprive the alienating co-parcener of his rights in the joint family. As the purchaser does not, by the death of the vendor, lose his right to a partition, so his position is not improved by the death of the other co-parceners before partition. The purchasers, like his alienor, is liable to have his share diminished upon partition by the birth of other co-parceners, if he stand by and does not insist on immediate partition. 6. RIGHT TO ACCOUNT ON PARTITION.

165. ———— Right to account of past transactions—Share in outstanding debts—Interest.—A plaintiff entitled on partition to half the property in the hands of his brother is bound to bring into hotchpot any ancestral property, or property acquired from ancestral funds which may be in his own hands, but is not liable to account for money received by him from his father while living in commensality with him and his brother, the circumstances of such receipt not being of a kind to impute fraud. Members of an undivided Hindu family making partition are entitled, as a rule, not to an account of past transactions, but to a division of the family property actually existing at the date of partition. In a partition suit, the Court ought not to order an immediate money payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of his share in the outstanding debts due to the family estate, as if such outstanding debts had been recovered and the money were in the hands of the defendant. As a member of an undivided Hindu family is not bound to effect a partition by paying a certain sum of money to his co-parceners, the Court in a partition suit ought not to award interest on money decreed to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the death of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead and there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. RANGO BALAJI v. 15. ——— Suit by reversioner with consent of reversioner having right to sue.—A suit by a reversioner to set aside an alienation is cognizable if the title of the reversioner has been injured by a distinct act of alienation, and if the widow who ought to have brought the suit has relinquished her life-interest and signified her assent to the suit proceeding. BHEEM RAM CHUCKERBUTTY v. HUREE KISHORE ROY . . 1 W. R., 359

16. ——— Suit to set aside adoption—Right to sue.—The mere possibility of succeeding to the estate held by a widow for life does not confer on the person having it the right to sue to contest an adoption alleged to have been made by the widow. Such a suit must be brought either by the presumptive heir, or in the case of his refusal to sue, or precluding himself by act or word from suing, or of his concurring in, or colluding with, the alleged adoption, by the next reversioner. In the latter case, the plaint must state why the presumptive heir does not sue, and the Court will, in the exercise of its discretion, decide whether the plaintiff is competent to sue. GOOSHAEEN TEEKUMJEE v. PURSOTUM LALLJEE . 3 Agra, 238

21. ——— Suit to set aside adoption—Right of suit.—Although a suit, to contest an adoption made by a Hindu widow of a son to her deceased husband, may be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, yet it is not the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding to the estate of inheritance held by the widow for her life is competent to bring such a suit. The right to sue must be limited. As a general rule, the suit must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, that is to say, by the person who would succeed to the estate if the widow were to die at the time of the suit. But it may be brought by a more distant heir, if those nearer in the line of succession are in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering. The rule laid down in Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vithal, 10 Bom., A. C., 351, approved. Reference made to Kooer Golab Singh v. Rao Kurun Singh, 14 Moore's I. A., 187. If the nearest heir had refused, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or had colluded with the widow, or had concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable heir would be, in respect of his interest, competent to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant heir claimed to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he was or was not competent in that respect to sue; and whether it was requisite or not that any nearer heir should be made a party to the suit. In a suit to have an alleged adoption set aside, the plaintiff, a minor, through his guardian, claimed to sue, on the strength of being the adopted son of the husband of a daughter of a brother of the father of the deceased, under whose authority the adoption was alleged to have been made by the widow, the defendant. The Judicial Committee, without deciding that, as an adopted son, this minor had the same rights as a naturally-born son, and without deciding that he would have been entitled, in default of nearer relations, to succeed to the estate of inheritance, after the death of the widow, pointed out that he could only have succeeded as a distant bandhu, and that he had not a vested, but at most a contingent interest. And held that, there being in fact heirs nearer in the line of succession than this minor, the grounds of his competence to sue in respect of his interest, assuming that interest to exist, should have been made out in the manner above indicated. To preserve the separate estate from becoming extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation, it was necessary to remove the adverse occupants and to place the estate in the possession of some person to be appointed to represent it; and as the widow (the legal representative) never was in possession and did not ask for it, but repudiated all claim to it, it was held that no one had a better right to the possession than the plaintiff, and possession was accordingly decreed to her as manager during the widow's lifetime. 49. ——— Alienation by widow—Fraud, Proof of.—A Hindu widow being in possession of certain lakhiraj lands in which she had a life-interest, the zamindar brought a suit against a minor reversioner and others to resume the land, obtained an ex-parte decree, and, whether under colour thereof or not, afterwards obtained possession. The widow, who was then dispossessed, brought a separate suit to recover the property, in which the reversioner, who had meantime come of age, was joined as a co-plaintiff. Owing to a petition presented by the widow, this suit was treated as having come to an end. Held that, in the circumstances, and the consequent jeopardy to the title of the reversioners, the reversioner above referred to was competent, without showing fraud on the part of the widow, to bring a suit to have the land reduced to his possession, and to prevent the zamindar from acquiring title by adverse possession. 50. ——— Collusion of widow with parties in adverse possession.—Suit by a Hindu daughter, for herself and as guardian of her minor son, to recover possession of her deceased father's separate estate. The legal representatives of the estate were, first, the deceased's widow, and after her, the plaintiff and her son. The widow not only failed to occupy and manage the estate, but, in collusion with the other defendants claiming under a hostile title, abandoned her rights, alleging that her husband was not separate, but a member of a joint family, and left the hostile holders undisturbed. To preserve the separate estate from becoming extinguished by the operation of the law of limitation, it was necessary to remove the adverse occupants and to place the estate in the possession of some person to be appointed to represent it; and as the widow (the legal representative) never was in possession and did not ask for it, but repudiated all claim to it, it was held that no one had a better right to the possession than the plaintiff, and possession was accordingly decreed to her as manager during the widow's lifetime. The appellant's case was that this consent had been given. The evidence of its having been given was the fact that this heir, having been appointed the widow's mukhtar for the purpose, had executed, on her behalf, a sale-deed containing words to the effect that the vendee had become (as the English translation on the record expressed it) "absolute" owner of the share sold. This heir, however, received no consideration to induce him to relinquish the reversionary title; and, on the death of the widow, his descendant claimed the inheritance against the vendee's son, then in possession. Held that it had not been made so clear that the conveyance transferred the whole estate of inheritance as to cause it to follow that the reversionary heir, when shown to have consented to the transfer by the widow, must be taken to have consented to a transfer by her of the whole estate of inheritance. Therefore, the judgment of the Appellate Court below, that the transfer extended only to the widow's life-estate, must be maintained. JIWAN SINGH v. MISRI LAL

The Court of first instance held that the alleged adoption had not been proved. In the lower Appellate Court the plea as to adoption was given up. Held that, upon the facts found, the plaintiff was the heir of the deceased widow, and as such entitled to succeed to her stridhan under the Hindu law. Thakoor Deyhee v. *Baluk Ram, 11 Moore's I. 31. ——————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage by Mahomedan to Hindu—Assignment of mortgaged land by mortgagor to Hindu assignee—Subsequent suit by mortgagee against assignee—Interest.—A, a Mahomedan, having in 1869 mortgaged certain land for R61 to B, a Hindu, afterwards assigned it to C, who was also a Hindu. At the date of this assignment the interest due on the mortgage (R122-15-10) was much more than the principal debt. B (the mortgagee) subsequently sued A and C for R270, being R61 for principal and R209 for interest. A did not appear. C contended that, the plaintiff and himself being Hindus, the law of damdupat applied, and that only as much interest as principal could be recovered. The lower Courts passed a decree for the principal (R61) together with all interest due at the date of the assignment to C. They disallowed subsequent interest, as the amount then due was already more than the principal. On appeal to the High Court,—Held (confirming the decree) that C was not personally liable to pay anything at all, but that land which he had purchased was charged with the amount due at the date of his purchase. Unless, therefore, he wished the land to be sold, he should pay that amount. The rule of damdupat did not apply in this case to the original mortgagor, who was a Mahomedan. He charged the land with a debt which included principal and interest, and he and his land were liable for both. He could not by any assignment prejudice his creditor or reduce the amount due to him, nor could he by assigning his land to a Hindu free it from any charge that existed on it at the date of the assignment. 32. ——————— Rule of damdupat—Mortgage—Original mortgagor a Hindu—Assignment of mortgage to Mahomedan purchaser—Suit by Mahomedan purchaser for redemption—Rule of damdupat how far applicable.—A Hindu mortgaged his property in 1843 to a Mahomedan for R150, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. On the 5th April 1880, the Hindu mortgagor's interest was sold to the plaintiff, who was a Mahomedan. In March 1893, the plaintiff sued for redemption, both parties to the suit being Mahomedan. Held that as long as the mortgagor was a Hindu (i.e., until 1880) the rule of damdupat applied, and that, as soon as the interest doubled the principal, further interest stopped. The sum of R300 was therefore the full amount of debt for which the land could be charged and liable in the hands of a Hindu debtor. But on the 5th April 1880 the plaintiff (a Mahomedan) became the debtor. The rule of damdupat then no longer applied: the stop was removed, and interest again began to run. The decree therefore ordered the plaintiff to redeem on payment of R300 (i.e., double the principal R150) with further interest at R12 per annum from the date of his purchase (5th April 1880) until payment. Under certain agreements made between her and one K, the latter received the rents of certain portions of the said immoveable property, and in consideration paid F certain fixed annual sums. On the 26th May 1883, there was a balance of R1,787-10-3 due from K to F in respect of the yearly privilege of recovering and receiving the said rents. F died intestate on the 18th December 1884, and the plaintiff, having obtained letters of administration to her estate, demanded payment of the said sum of R1,787-10-3 from K. It appeared that, after F's death, K had paid this sum to G, who was F's grandson and the reversioner expectant on the determination of F's widow's estate, and on her death had succeeded to all the immoveable property as the right heir of her husband M. The question was whether the said sum of R1,787-10-3 belonged to F's estate, or remained portion of the immoveable property of M, and as such properly payable to G as his heir. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover it as part of F's estate. 2. POWER OF WIDOW—continued.

(b) POWER OF DISPOSITION OR ALIENATION.

38. ——— Power of alienation—Alienation for religious or charitable purposes—Necessity—Right of Crown taking property to set aside alienation—Onus probandi.—Under the Hindu law, a widow, though she takes as heir, takes a special and qualified estate. If there be collateral heirs of her husband, she cannot of her own will alienate the property except for special purposes. For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely wordly purposes. To support an alienation for the last, she must show necessity. The restrictions on her power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and independent of the existence of heirs capable of taking on her death. If for want of heirs the property, so far as it has not been lawfully disposed of by her, passes to the Crown, the Crown has the same power of protecting its interest as an heir by impeaching any injurious alienation by the widow. The onus is on those who claim under an alienation from a Hindu widow to show that the transaction was within her limited powers. COLLECTOR OF MASULIPATAM v. CAVALY VENCATA NARAINAPAH

41. ——— Alienations by a widow of her husband's estate in order to pay his time-barred debts—Widow's status as distinguished from that of a manager—Liability of alienees—Rights of reversioners.—According to the Hindu law, a widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for the purpose of paying his debts, even though they may be barred by the law of limitation. Her alienations for such a purpose are legal and binding on the reversionary heirs. A widow stands in a different position from that of a manager of a joint family. The latter can act only with the consent, express or implied, of the body of co-parceners. In the widow's case, the co-parceners are reduced to herself, and the estate centres in her. She can therefore do what the body of co-parceners can do, subject always to the condition that she act fairly to the expectant heirs. The rights of these heirs impose, on persons dealing with a widow, the obligation of special circumspection, failing which they may find their securities against the estate to be of no avail after the widow's death. 63. ——————— Restriction on alienation—Proof of legal necessity.—The restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate. Their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. The plaintiffs sued as purchasers of the equity of redemption from S, a Hindu widow, to redeem a mortgage effected by her husband B. The mortgage deed recited that a portion of the mortgaged land was held by B, not as owner, but as mortgagee from a third party. S was alive when the suit was instituted, but she died after the settlement of issues. The plaintiff then filed a supplementary claim to succeed as B's next heir. The defendants (the sons of the mortgagee) contended that the plaintiff could not redeem because the sale by S was invalid. They also claimed compensation for loss of the rents and profits of a portion of the mortgaged property redeemed from B by the original owner. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim. In appeal, the District Judge confirmed his decree, being of opinion that the sale was valid as against the defendants, because there were no collateral heirs. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, following the decision of the Privy Council in Collector of Masulipatam v. *Cavaly Venkata Narrainapah, 2 W. R., P. C., 61 : 8 Moore's I. Therefore, when the widow of the adoptive father, nearly thirty years after his death, gave effect to his undertaking by executing a deed of gift of his property in her hands in favour of the adopted son,—Held that such alienation was valid as against the next heir by blood of the adoptive father, and he could not, on the death of the widow, avail himself of the plea of limitation which she had waived. The reversioners sued to set aside the sale. Held that, although there might have been no absolute necessity for the widow to sell the property to provide herself with maintenance, still, as there was no other family property, the property in question must necessarily have been sold at the expiration of the time fixed by the mortgage, and the sale by the widow ought be supported. After A's death, his widow adopted C on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that C was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. All these alienations to the defendant were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and, on the widow's death, sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit. Held that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband, could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or on his alienee, the plaintiff. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers. By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that, during the life of his minor son, she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity; and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts. Held that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid. Notes promising to pay interest, additional to that contracted for in the mortgages, had been signed by the husband, which it was held could not affect the right to redeem, being unregistered. 2. POWER OF WIDOW—concluded.

The widow invested the sum so received in Government securities, and twenty years afterwards created with this fund a trust in favour of one G C R, and appointed B trustee thereof. On the death of the widow, the daughters of the testator tried to set aside this trust, claiming the funds as a portion of their father's estate with which the widow had no right to deal. Held that, as the accumulations were handed over to the widow by the person entitled to the reversion after the estate had vested in him, and a release had been entered into between them, no presumption arose that the fund in question had been accumulated by the widow for the benefit of other heirs of the testator, and that, there being no such presumption, the facts of the case must be looked at to ascertain the intention of the parties regarding this fund. Held as to this that the conduct of the widow evidenced no intention to accumulate the sum received by her for the benefit of any person but herself, or that she ever intended to give up the power of disposing, expending, or dealing with it in any way. 3. DECREES AGAINST WIDOW AS REPRESENTING THE ESTATE OR PERSONALLY.

88. ——— Effect of decree against Hindu widow—How far binding on inheritance.—The same principle which has prevailed in England as to tenants-in-tail representing the inheritance would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow, as there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow. A decree in a suit for a zamindari by a Hindu widow binds those claiming the zamindari in succession to her, unless it can be impeached on some special ground. 99. ———— Execution of decree against widow as representing estate—Sale in execution of decree—Widow's interest under deed of adoption—Right of purchaser against adopted son.—The plaintiff sued to follow into the hands of the defendant certain property to which the latter had by transfers acquired the title of the purchaser at an auction-sale held in June 1843. The ground of his claim was that the late owner, who died before the sale, had left his widow a permission to adopt a son, and thereupon in 1856 she had adopted the plaintiff. His contention was that the sale was of the widow's interest merely, the permission to adopt having given to her, in the event of an adoption, a life-interest in the property, and that, upon her death in 1865, his interest accrued. Held that, as the proceeds of the execution-sale were not applied to satisfy only a liability incurred after the owner's death, but also decrees for other debts, for which the estate was liable, there was no substantial ground to impeach the long title acquired by the respondent. 100. ———— Execution of decree against widow for arrears of maintenance—Sale of right, title, and interest of widow—Maintenance of widow—Charge on estate of husband.—A Hindu died, leaving two sons, S and M, who became separate in estate. S died, leaving a son, K, who became a lunatic. M died, leaving a widow, N, and two sons, B and C; and on his death, his sons B and C took possession of their father's estate, and entered into an agreement with their mother, N, to pay her R200 per annum for maintenance, and hypothecated some villages as security for due payment. B died and C remained in exclusive possession of the property. After the death of C, his widows, R and D, and afterwards D alone, took possession of the estate. N sued D for arrears of maintenance accrued since the death of C and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree, she attached the rights and interests of D in certain properties, but she died before any sale took place. The plaintiff, the son of K, then obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 as representative of N. He was appointed a guardian of K, who was, in a suit brought by him before his insanity and before the death of N, declared, by a decree made in 1848, entitled to the estate of C as reversioner. The plaintiff executed the decree obtained by N, and caused the properties, which had been before attached, to be sold in 1866. Some time after D died, and the plaintiff then sued the purchaser to recover possession of the property as the representative of his father under the decree of 1848, but was defeated on the ground set up by the defendants, the purchasers, that his father was no longer heir to C by reason of supervenient insanity when the succession opened out to him on the death of N. The plaintiff then brought this suit to establish his own title to the property as heir of C. It was contended by the defendants, among other things, that by the sale in execution in 1866, under the decree obtained by N against D, the absolute proprietary title passed, and not the life-interest of the widow only. Held that the arrears of maintenance for which the sale in 1866 took place was the personal debt of D, and that nothing but her life-interest passed under the sale. has, for some purposes, only a partial or qualified right, title, and interest in the estate which was her husband's, yet for other purposes she represents an absolute interest therein. The question whether, on the sale of the right, title, and interest of the widow in execution of a decree, the whole interest or inheritance in the family estate does or does not pass, depends on the nature of the suit in which the execution of the decree takes place. If the suit is a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's limited estate is sold. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the family estate, or upon a cause not merely personal against her, then the whole of the inheritance passes by the execution-sale. The judgment which the decree has followed may be examined in order to determine which of these two results attends the execution-sale of the widow's right, title, and interest. The suit was compromised by means of a razinama, one of the terms of which was that the widow should remain in possession of and enjoy the property, but should not alienate it without the brother's permission. Subsequently a personal decree was obtained against the widow, and the land, being sold in execution, was purchased by the defendant in the present suit, in which the first plaintiff was the nephew and reversioner of the deceased husband. Held that the suit against the widow being on a personal claim, only her limited interest in the property was sold in execution, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the property. Jugul Kishore v. *Jotendro Mohun Tagore, I. In execution of one of these decrees passed against M, he sold the property in suit belonging to the estate of N, and purchased a moiety of it himself. In a suit on the death of M, by the reversionary heirs of N to recover possession of his share of the property, in which his widow M had only a life-interest, on the allegation that only her life-interest, and not the entire estate, passed,—Held that the suit for contribution brought by J was a suit to recover a debt due by the estate. The amount of the debt in the shape of mesne profits had been decreed against M and others, as representing the estate of N and K, and it was not therefore a personal debt of M. That being so, the purchaser at the auction-sale took the entire estate and not merely the qualified interest of the widow. Jugul Kishore v. *Jotendro Mohun Tagore, I. L. So where there is a charge created by the ancestor from whom the widow and the reversioners alike derive their title, there is such identity of interest as will justify the widow being treated as the "substantial representative." But where the widow is the person who has created the charge, there is no authority to shew that she sufficiently represents the reversioners. Nogendra Chundra Ghose v. *Sreemutty Kamini Dassee, 11 Moore's I. 114. ——— Decree in compromise made by widow after adoption of son in suit on mortgage executed before adoption.—A, executrix to the estate of her husband, executed a mortgage bond, partly for money due on bonds executed by her husband in his lifetime, and partly for payment of Government revenue due from the estate. She then adopted a son, B, under authority granted by the will of her husband. After the adoption, a suit was brought on the mortgage bond against A, and a decree was passed in terms of a compromise for payment by instalments, the mortgaged property remaining hypothecated as before. Default was made in payment of the instalments, and the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and B was substituted for A in the proceedings in execution. An objection was raised that the compromise decree was only a personal decree against A, and execution could not proceed against B. Held that it was not a mere personal decree against A, but was binding on the estate inherited by B from his adoptive father. Ishan Chunder Mitter v. Buksh Ali Soudugar, Marsh., 614; General Manager of Raj Durbhunga v. *Ramput Singh, 14 Moore's I. 115. ——— Decree against widow for husband's debt—Liability of family property—Execution-sale—Minor sons bound though not parties to suit—Suit by sons to redeem mortgage.—One G died leaving him surviving a widow and two minor sons. The widow mortgaged some lands and a house to pay off a debt due by her husband. Subsequently a money decree was passed against her for another debt due by her husband, and the greater part of the mortgaged property was sold in execution and the equity of redemption thereof was purchased by the mortgagee (the defendant). The sons were not parties to the suit in execution proceedings. The sons afterwards brought this suit claiming that not having been parties to the suit their interests were not affected by the sale, and praying for redemption. The lower Courts allowed the claim and passed a decree for the plaintiffs. On second appeal,—Held (reversing the decree and remanding the case) that the Courts in determining the effect of an execution-sale must look to the substance of the transaction. The question was whether the debt for which the property was sold was a joint family debt, and whether it was the equity of redemption in the entirety of the mortgaged property that was offered for sale, bargained for, and intended to be bought. It was obvious that, if the sons had been parties to the suit in which the decree had been passed, they would have appeared by their mother and guardian, and there was no reason to suppose that anything would have been differently done in the suit if she had been described as their guardian instead of being treated as the representative of the estate. Under these circumstances, the sons were substantially represented in the suit, and the sale and proceedings therein should be treated as valid, unless the sons were able to show either that their father's debt, which was the foundation of the decree, was of such a nature that no liability arising from it could attach to the family property, or, if they failed in that, they might show that the entirety of the family property was, in fact, not sold. Held in the same case on appeal to the Privy Council.—It has not been established that the estate of a widow forms an exception to the general rule that the estate of a Hindu once vested by succession or inheritance is not divested by any act or incapacity which before succession would have formed a ground for exclusion from inheritance. The general rule is stated in the Viramitrodaya, Ch. VIII, "On exclusion from inheritance," paras. 3, 4, and 5. This work, like the Mitakshara, may be referred to in Bengal in cases in regard to which the Dayabhaga is silent. A widow who, not having been degraded or deprived of caste, had inherited the estate of her deceased husband, held not liable to forfeit that estate by reason of subsequent acts of unchastity. Quære—As to the effect of her being degraded or deprived of caste for unchastity. 131. ———— Estate of deceased widow who lived a life of unchastity—Right of step-son to inherit—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), s. 1.—The step-son of a deceased Hindu widow sued as her heir for possession of certain property. The defence was that the widow had deserted her husband in his lifetime and lived a life of unchastity, and that the plaintiff's right of inheritance was in consequence destroyed. Held that, assuming the widow to have been guilty of unchastity and to have been actually degraded for it, plaintiff's right to inherit her property in the absence of nearer heirs could not be affected by such degradation. Held also that, though Act XXI of 1850 gives relief against the forfeiture of rights of persons deprived of caste on other grounds besides that of renouncing or being excluded from the Hindu religion, it does not restore to an outcaste all the rights which he, as a casteman, could have civilly enforced; nor does it contemplate the restoration of privileges the granting of which would amount to an interference with the autonomy of caste; nor does it interfere with the forfeiture of such a right, as, e.g., to participate with other members of a caste in the benefits of a religious institution appropriated to the members of the caste, or to participate jointly with fellow-castemen in the benefit of a caste institution; nor can it apply where the question is not as to the rights of a degraded person, but as to who is entitled to the property of a degraded person. Kery Kolitany v. Moneeram Kolita, 13 B. L. R., 1, referred to. Held further that, though under the Hindu law a loss of caste by expulsion for specified reasons causes forfeiture of rights, it has never broken the relationship of the person expelled to those who remain within the caste, degradation having merely the effect of rendering the tie of kindred but dormant; and, e.g., the degradation of either spouse does not dissolve the tie of marriage. It is impossible to construct out of the Smritis and commentaries a consistent doctrine of "civil death" or "fiction of death." Prostitution does not sever the legal relation, and therefore the degradation of a woman in consequence of her unchastity does not in law entail a cessation of the tie of kindred between her and the members of her natural family or between her and the members of her husband's family. Nor does a wife's adultery, unattended by degradation, dissolve the marriage. Held therefore that the step-son was entitled to inherit the property as sapinda of the widow's late husband in the absence of nearer heirs. The doctrine of the alienability, by a co-parcener, of his undivided share, without the consent of his co-sharers, should not be extended, in the above manner, beyond the decided cases. The Bombay Court had ruled that a co-parcener could not, without his co-sharer's consent, either give or devise his share, and that the alienation must be for value. The Madras Court had ruled that, although a co-parcener could alienate his share by gift, that right was itself founded on the right to partition, and died with the co-parcener, the title of the other co-sharers vesting in them by survivorship at the moment of his death. Without a decision as to which of these conflicting views, in regard to alienation by gift, was correct, the principles upon which the Madras Court had decided against the power of alienation by will were held to be sound and sufficient to support that decision. D brought her suit to establish her right as widow of C to a moiety of the family property. The High Court, on appeal, held (1) that D ought, firstly, to have shown her title to sue,—i.e., having admitted the family came from Mithila, she ought to have shown that they were no longer governed by the Mitakshara law; (2) that for several generations the rule of inheritance had been according to the Dayabhaga; (3) that the alleged will was not proved (there was evidence before the Court of the factum of the will adequate to the proof of an ordinary will, but the Court held that this evidence was outweighed by the internal improbabilities); (4) that if the rule of inheritance was not according to the Dayabhaga, the will was invalid... In 1848 she adopted a son under the will with the knowledge of the members of the family, and the will was for a period of twenty-seven years generally recognized and acted on by the testator's family. The Judicial Committee held (reversing the decree of the High Court) in accordance with the finding of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that the will was proved. Where a will was executed by the testator signing with the Bengali letter "M" and it was argued that the testator being in very weak health, the firm way in which the "M" was written threw discredit upon it, the Judicial Committee preferred the decision of the native Judge on this point to that of the English Judges of the High Court, and expressed doubt as to the value of the style of such writing as evidence in favour of the will being [illegible]. 63. ———— Bequest to sons with gifts over—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 82 and 111—Absolute estate given.—This appeal related to three clauses in the will of a Hindu, who bequeathed his property to his two sons, one of whom had a son. The other son was childless, his only issue having died before the will was made. There were gifts over on the death of either son. The Courts below, construing the first of the three clauses, decided that each of the two sons took a life interest in the property comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common; and that the ulterior interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate. On this appeal, with reference to s. 82 of "the Indian Succession Act, 1865," made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, a doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in the clause it sufficiently appeared that the estates given to the sons were only estates for life. It was, however, in the view taken of the other clause of which the construction was in dispute, unnecessary to determine that point. In the second clause to be construed there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life-estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether these words, which form the gift to the testator's two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only the life-interest was intended to be given to them, was considered, likewise, to be open to doubt, [illegible] regard to the rule of construction imposed by s. 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as the clause the 13th in the will was [illegible] the circumstances. It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No. 19 in the will, clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator's two sons in equal shares each an absolute estate, except in the case of the [illegible] daughter. Between clauses 13 and 19 [illegible] They were each [illegible] circumstances. Held that the two sons of the testator must be declared to have each taken an absolute interest in the half share of the residuary estate. 60. ———— Words "share and share alike"—Life-estate of widow in immoveable property.—V and M, Hindus residing in Bombay, made a deed of partition in 1823 of the whole of the family property, moveable and immoveable, which had come into their joint enjoyment on the death of their father. V died in 1850, having made a will prepared by an English solicitor, in the English language and form, by which, after various bequests to members of the family, he disposed of the residue of his estate, one-third share to his son V absolutely; another third to his son L absolutely; "and the remaining clear third share to my grandsons, K, V, G, and N, the sons of my late son M, deceased, their and each of their respective heirs, executors. administrators, and assigns, share and share alike." These residuary bequests, it was provided, were not to take effect until after the death of the testator's widow, who was appointed executrix and manager of the whole estate during her life; but the estate was divided by the award of arbitrators in 1855, after making a provision for the widow, in substantial accordance with the directions of the will. V and L immediately thereafter took possession of their respective third shares of the moveable and immoveable estate, but the third share allotted to the four sons of M, who were all still infants, remained unapportioned until 1856, when, on a suit being filed, the greater part of the moveable property was apportioned. The immoveable property allotted to them remained unapportioned, and was managed, first, by the widow of M till her death in 1855; then by his eldest son K, till his death, without male issue, in 1859; then by the next eldest son V till his death, without issue, in 1864; and afterwards by the elder of the two surviving sons; and the proceeds were treated throughout as though the property was held in co-parcenary by the four sons as a joint and undivided Hindu family. In a suit brought by L, the widow of K, against K's surviving brothers, and S, the widow of his brother V, in which L claimed to be absolutely entitled as heir of her husband [and also as heir of her daughter, who died after her husband's death, childless and unmarried] to a fourth part of the third share of the estate allotted by the award of 1855,—Held in the lower Court (1) that the words "share and share alike," occurring in the will of V, ought not to be construed as necessarily constituting a tenancy-in-common, with all the incidents attached thereto in English law, but that each of the four sons of M took a separate share in the third of the testator's residuary estate; the share of each son going on his decease to those who would, according to Hindu (and not according to English) law, be his heirs as a separated Hindu; (2) that with regard to the immoveable property devised by the will and allotted by the award to the sons of M, there never was a union of estate, a co-parcenary, from the commencement; and consequently there was no re-union in the sense of the Hindu law, notwithstanding joint enjoyment and common residence; but only postponement for a time, and for purposes of convenience, of an apportionment of the estate, which was accordingly (among other things) decreed. Held on appeal that the language of the testator showed an intention that his grandsons should take the one-third between them in severalty and as members of a divided family, and that the will must be so construed. As his views appeared to favour single heirship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one, and the donee of the power to adopt being one,—Held that accordingly the words "Maharani Sahiba" were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held also that, as if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. I of Act I of 1869; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukhdari as out of the non-talukhdari estate of the testator. Held also that this had been rightly decreed to he as she had sued upon the will, although her direcr claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the

60. ———— Words "share and share alike"—Life-estate of widow in immoveable property.—V and M, Hindus residing in Bombay, made a deed of partition in 1823 of the whole of the family property, moveable and immoveable, which had come into their joint enjoyment on the death of their father. V died in 1850, having made a will prepared by an English solicitor, in the English language and form, by which, after various bequests to members of the family, he disposed of the residue of his estate, one-third share to his son V absolutely; another third to his son L absolutely; "and the remaining clear third share to my grandsons, K, V, G, and N, the sons of my late son M, deceased, their and each of their respective heirs, executors. administrators, and assigns, share and share alike." These residuary bequests, it was provided, were not to take effect until after the death of the testator's widow, who was appointed executrix and manager of the whole estate during her life; but the estate was divided by the award of arbitrators in 1855, after making a provision for the widow, in substantial accordance with the directions of the will. V and L immediately thereafter took possession of their respective third shares of the moveable and immoveable estate, but the third share allotted to the four sons of M, who were all still infants, remained unapportioned until 1856, when, on a suit being filed, the greater part of the moveable property was apportioned. The immoveable property allotted to them remained unapportioned, and was managed, first, by the widow of M till her death in 1855; then by his eldest son K, till his death, without male issue, in 1859; then by the next eldest son V till his death, without issue, in 1864; and afterwards by the elder of the two surviving sons; and the proceeds were treated throughout as though the property was held in co-parcenary by the four sons as a joint and undivided Hindu family. In a suit brought by L, the widow of K, against K's surviving brothers, and S, the widow of his brother V, in which L claimed to be absolutely entitled as heir of her husband [and also as heir of her daughter, who died after her husband's death, childless and unmarried] to a fourth part of the third share of the estate allotted by the award of 1855,—Held in the lower Court (1) that the words "share and share alike," occurring in the will of V, ought not to be construed as necessarily constituting a tenancy-in-common, with all the incidents attached thereto in English law, but that each of the four sons of M took a separate share in the third of the testator's residuary estate; the share of each son going on his decease to those who would, according to Hindu (and not according to English) law, be his heirs as a separated Hindu; (2) that with regard to the immoveable property devised by the will and allotted by the award to the sons of M, there never was a union of estate, a co-parcenary, from the commencement; and consequently there was no re-union in the sense of the Hindu law, notwithstanding joint enjoyment and common residence; but only postponement for a time, and for purposes of convenience, of an apportionment of the estate, which was accordingly (among other things) decreed. LAKSHMIBAI v. GANPAT MORABA . . 4 Bom., O. C., 150

Held on appeal that the language of the testator showed an intention that his grandsons should take the one-third between them in severalty and as members of a divided family, and that the will must be so construed. And the doctrine that ancestral property after partition can be disposed of as self-acquired property was disapproved of as being opposed to the authorities and general spirit of Hindu law. As his views appeared to favour single heirship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one, and the donee of the power to adopt being one,—Held that accordingly the words "Maharani Sahiba" were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held also that, as if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. I of Act I of 1869; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukhdari as out of the non-talukhdari estate of the testator. Held also that this had been rightly decreed to he as she had sued upon the will, although her direcr claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the

The will made a further provision that the daughters "shall not have on any account the right to sell or alienate their shares." Held (1) the expression maliks ordinarily implies an absolute gift, and there is no authority for introducing into the will the idea that a female ought not to obtain anything beyond an estate for her lifetime (2) Having regard to s 111 of the Indian Succession Act (applicable under the Hindu Wills Act, 1870) and the Privy Council case of Norendra Nath Sircar v. *Kamalbasini Dasi, I. [I. L. R., 20 Calc., 906

In the same case on appeal to the Privy Council it was held there are two cardinal principles in the construction of wills, deeds, and other documents. The first is that clear and unambiguous dispositive words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is that technical words, or words of known legal import, must have their legal effect, even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not use the technical terms in their proper sense. Doed. Gallini v. Gallini, 5 B. & Ad., 621, referred to and followed. In a Hindu will an heritable and alienable estate is to be understood by the use of the words "shall become malik," unless the context indicates a different intention. The words putra poutradi krame have acquired a technical force, and are used as meaning an estate of inheritance. That a testator may have imperfectly understood the words which he has used, or the effects of conferring an hereditary estate, would not justify the giving an interpretation to his words other than their legal meaning. A will contained the following in favour of the testator's [illegible] that he "I coming my sthalabhishikto [illegible] shall become malik of all my estate and [illegible] shall [illegible] enjoy, with son, grandson and [illegible] in succession (putra poutradi krame) the pro[illegible]." Provision followed for the main[illegible] of this nephew's widow and of this daughter, [illegible] and a gift over that, "in the absence [illegible] of the said nephew [illegible] grandson, great-grandson, and [illegible] of the [illegible] of my sisters . . . the eldest, with son, grandson and so on in succession, shall [illegible] the [illegible]ship. On a claim by the [illegible] of the testator against the [illegible] for the construction of the will,—Held that [illegible] the true construction of the entire will, the prima facie legal meaning of the disposing words used was [illegible] by the context so as to establish any [illegible] by making it clear that the words were [illegible] in their proper sense, that there was [illegible] expressed to give a succession of life-[illegible] to the nephew and his male issue only—a disposition which would not have accorded with Hindu law; but that an alienable and heritable estate was devised to him. Specified property was given by the will in trust for the income to be expended for religious and charitable purposes, with an express prohibition of alienation of this property. There was also a gift of the testator's estates to Government for charitable purposes in the event of no one entitled to be the testator's sthalabhishikto remaining alive. If expressed as to the heritable estate in which the beneficial interest accompanied the gift, the prohibition of alienation would have been merely void, without any effect upon the disposition of that estate. Held, however, as to property given for religious and charitable purposes, it was valid by Hindu law. No decision as to the effect of the gift over the secular heritable estate was required, inasmuch as the contingency upon which it was limited to go over had not occurred, and might not occur. During his lifetime M R had caused to be recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of two villages, D and A, owned by him—"S, wife of my son S R, shall be regarded as owner after my death." In the wajib-ul-arz of a third village the following entry was recorded—"After my death G, the adopted son, and S, the wife of S R, shall have a right to the property." Subsequently to the death of M R, the nature of the estate taken by S in the villages D and A came before a Court of law, and S did not challenge the decree which was then passed declaring her interest to be only a life-estate. Held that, under the above circumstances, and having regard to the sentiments prevalent amongst Hindus on the subject of the devolution of immoveable property upon females, the devise of the villages D and A must be taken to convey an estate for life only and not the absolute ownership in the villages. Soorjeemoney Dossee v. *Denobundhoo Mullick, 6 Moore's I. The widow obtained possession of the property comprised in the will on the death of D. The daughter died in the lifetime of the widow, who thereupon made a will leaving the property which had come to her from D to J. On the death of the widow, certain persons alleging themselves to be the nearest reversioners to D claimed the property. Held that on the wording of the will and having regard to the surrounding circumstances of the case, the testator having no near male heirs, and the plaintiffs, if reversioners at all, being remote reversioners, the intention of the testator D was to leave the property in question to his widow as her stridhan, to descend to her heirs. Koonjbehari Dhur v. *Premchand Dutt, I. On the question as to what was the nature and extent of the interest to which the testator's widow was entitled thereunder,—Held that, having regard to the rule of construction which has been repeatedly applied to gifts by Hindus in favour of their wives, the intention of the testator was not that his wife should take an absolute estate. The supposition is that a Hindu donor intends to act in accordance with the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus regarding the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of his family. Though it was competent for the testator to provide for his wife in such a way that she should have absolute control over the property given her, that is not the provision which the Hindu law makes for a widow. 79. ———— Beneficial interest in surplus—Prohibition of alienation.—A Hindu lady left by will to her sons lands belonging to her to support the daily worship of an idol, and defray the expenses of certain other religious ceremonies, with a provision that, in the event of there being a surplus after these uses had been satisfied out of the revenue of the said lands, such surplus should be applied to the support of the family. Held that this provision amounted to a bequest of the surplus to the members of the joint family for their own use and benefit, and that each of the sons of the testatrix took a share in the property, which, after satisfying the religious and ceremonial trusts, might be considerable, and could not be presumed to be valueless. Held also that directions given by the testatrix in her will to the effect that her heirs should have no power of gift or sale over the property bequeathed, and that it should not be attached or sold on account of their debts, being inconsistent with the interest actually given, were wholly beyond her power, and must be rejected as having no operation. 80. ———— Direction in will operating as gift—Power to adopt conferred on testator's widow determined on estate vesting in his son's widow—Gift of beneficial interest.—The following points were ruled in construing the will of a Hindu testator: (a) a direction to make over the estate to the son when he came of age is equivalent to a gift to him to take effect at that time; (b) a provision to meet the contingency "if my son dies," in order to be consistent with an absolute gift on his attaining majority, must mean if my son dies during minority; (c) dakildar, though ordinarily meaning "occupant," must be construed in reference to the context and held to mean possessor or manager, though without beneficial interest. Held that the testator's widow took no power to adopt under the will in the event which happened, viz., of his estate having vested in his son and afterwards in the son's widow. Thayammal v. *Venkatarama Aiyan, L. In execution of a decree passed against D in his personal capacity, the properties were attached, and J preferred a claim on the ground of his purchase. The claim was allowed and the properties were released from attachment. In a suit brought by the decree-holder for a declaration that the properties were liable to be sold in execution of his decree, it was held that the position of D under the will being not merely that of an executor, but that of a residuary legatee as well, and the restrictions imposed upon D by the will invalid under the ruling in Ashutosh Dutt v. *Doorga Churn Chatterjee, I. Upon its being contended that the provision in favour of the wife merely conferred upon her, or recognized, a right to maintenance and that the power of the brother to alienate was as extensive during the life of the widow

95. ——————— Adopted son where adoption is invalid—Endowment—Gift to shebaits—Effect of ikrarnama between widows in favour of sons whose adoption was invalid.—A testator bequeathed all his property to a family thakur, and, to secure the debsheba, directed that his two widows should each adopt a son to him, the sons to become shebaits of the property dedicated, of which the widows, during the sons' minority, were to have control. When the two sons should have attained their majority, the two widows were, by the will, to make over to them as shebaits all the property dedicated; and out of the surplus income, after payment of the expenses of the debsheba, the two sons were to receive a fixed allowance, the residue being undisposed of. The widows, having purported to adopt according to the will, then bound themselves by an ikrarnama, each to the other, to bring up the sons as their mothers and guardians, and, after payment of the expenses for the debsheba, to divide the surplus income into two equal shares, making accumulations, which should be handed over by each to the son adopted by her on his attaining majority. In a suit by the son purported to have been adopted by the elder widow, who was then dead, against the younger widow, and the son purported to have been adopted by her, in effect for the administration of the testator's estate, with a claim for relief based on acts of the widows, including the ikrarnama executed by them,—Held, first, that it being settled law that such an adoption was not valid, the plaintiff could take nothing under the will, because there was no gift to him except in the character of shebait, there having been no intention on the part of the testator, who apparently had no doubt as to the legality of his scheme to bring in a stranger as shebait. Monemothonauth Day v. Onauthnauth Day, Bourke, 189 : 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 24, distinguished. Secondly, that by the law of inheritance the widows as heirs took the office of shebait, and became entitled to the beneficial interest in the surplus income for their estates for life, so that each of them could contract to bind her own interest. Thirdly, that there was no trust imposed upon the surviving widow independently of the contract which she had made; but that the ikrarnama, taken as part of the series of acts, gave to the boys, so far as the widows' interests extended, the same benefit that they would have taken had they been heirs; and although they were not, and could not have been at their age, parties to the ikrarnama, yet that they could insist on the performance of the contract, by which each widow bound herself to the other to deal with the estate in their favour. Fourthly, that each boy was entitled on attaining majority to half of the surplus income during the life of the surviving widow, and to the accumulations thereon; and accounts were accordingly directed against her. This widow, however, having died pending the appeal, after it had been argued, the testator's heir was added to the record, it resting with the plaintiff to apply to the Court below to add necessary parties. After the testator's death, the widow, as in exercise of the power conferred on her by the will, purported to adopt a boy who did not come within the description in the first of the above clauses, although one of the testator's brothers offered his own son in adoption. In a suit by the testator's brothers for a declaration that the adoption purported to have been made by the widow was invalid,—Held that, notwithstanding the general terms of the second of the above clauses, the widow's power to adopt was restricted by the first, and the adoption purported to have been made by her was invalid. The testator further declared that "the said executors or any of" his "heirs and representatives" should "not be able to make any kind of gift, sale, or alienation, or create any incumbrance on the" said baitakhana-house, "and none of" his "heirs" should "be able to claim it in his own right; but that the "executors" should "be competent to allow" the testator's "brother, I L R, and his sister's son, S D R, to use the said baitakhana and rooms, etc." Held that this clause did not operate to dedicate the baitakhana-house to the idol Shiva, nor to vest it in the executors, but that on the death of the testator it descended to his heir-at-law, freed from any prohibition against alienation. The testator further directed that his executors should "keep in deposit Government Promissory Notes of R9,500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of" the baitakhana "house in proper time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his sheba (worship) and for the repairs of the temple," the expenses of these acts to be defrayed out of interest of the R9,500. Held that (there having been no dedication of the baitakhana-house to the idol) the sum of R9,500 must be apportioned, one moiety going to the heir-at-law, to whom the baitakhana-house had descende[d] and the other to the executors for the repairs of th[e] temple and the worship of the idol. In the expounding of Hindu wills the Court should presume that the holder did not intend to depart from the general law beyond what he explicitly declares. B, while he had constituted his widow H as one of his heirs contrary to the general principles of Hindu law, which only gave her a right to maintenance, was silent as to how far her right of heirship was to extend. The right was to be construed in a manner most consistent with the general principles of Hindu law; and to hold that a joint tenancy had been created between H and N would be in distinct derogation of the joint family system, which is the keystone of Hindu law. It would be in effect to exclude the son's family, for the benefit of the widow, in total disregard of the relations and obligations of a Hindu family. B and M both died in the lifetime of C's two widows' M died first, childless and unmarried. B left a widow him surviving, who claimed that under cl. 2 B took a vested estate in the testator's share in the two houses, which on his death devolved upon her, and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested estate in joint tenancy; that on M's death his interest survived to B, and on his death devolved upon his widow. It was contended on behalf of the two widows of C, the testator, that the gift to B by cl. 2 and to B and M by cl. 16 was contingent, and had lapsed by their deaths; that the result was an intestacy so far as regards the property in question; that they consequently took a widow's estate in the immoveable property for their lives; and that upon their death the property should go to the testator's daughter J; and that, as to the moveables, they took absolutely. Held that under cl. 2 B took on the death of the testator not a contingent, but a vested estate in perpetuity, which on his death devolved on his widow; and that under cl. 16 B and M took a vested interest in joint tenancy in the whole of the residuary estate; that on the death of M, the survivor B took the whole absolutely, and on his death his interest was transmitted to his widow. Held also that the interest taken by B under the above clauses of the will was subject to the right of the testator's widows to reside in the houses, and to have their monthly allowances paid out of the moveable estate, and was subject also to the bequests, charitable and otherwise, contained in the will. By cls. 15 and 16 of his will the testator directed that certain monthly allowances should be paid to each of his widows out of the interest of certain Government promissory loan notes which were to be purchased by his trustees. Held that, if the particular sources of income, out of which the testator directed these allowances to be paid, should prove insufficient, the rest of the moveable property, or the income derivable from it, as well as the rents of the immoveable property, should contribute. The funds belonging to the testator's estate had, in accordance with the directions in his will, been kept in the firm of Visram Mowji, in which the testator had been a partner. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the firm should be charged interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. 119. ———— Executor, Estate of—Administrator, Suit by—Trustees—Notice—Charitable Trust—Parties.—B K, a Hindu, by his will, executed in Bombay and dated 6th January 1802, bequeathed a house to his wife R for her life in trust to allow the impersonations of Valabh to reside in it, and appointed four executors by name, but made no gift over of the house to those executors or to any one else. The will was proved by the four executors on 24th September 1808. On 23rd June 1820, R, claiming as executrix according to the tenor, obtained an order granting probate to her as well as to the executors expressly appointed. The executors retired, and R acted alone in the management of the testator's estate. On 4th September 1862, R sold the house for its full value to the defendant, who had notice of the charitable trust affecting it. R died on 23rd March 1870. On 17th March 1871, the High Court, on the application of one A T, revoked the probate of B K's will granted to R, but without prejudice to any act done in due course of administration by R, and granted letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K to A T. On 13th July 1873 A T died. On 1st May 1875 the plaintiff, who was the only son and heir of A T, instituted the present suit for the purpose of recovering from the defendant possession of the trust premises sold to him by R. The plaintiff was also one of the surviving heirs of B K, and, by virtue of a release executed to him by the other heirs, was the sole surviving heir who had any beneficial interest in B K's estate. The plaintiff, however, did not claim the house in the possession of the defendant as the beneficial owner, but to hold it for the purpose of giving effect to the trust created by the will of B K. On 28th January 1876 the plaintiff obtained letters of administration cum testamento annexo and de bonis non of B K, and it was on these letters that he now based his claim. Held, 1st, that the plaintiff had no ground of action as administrator of B K. Held, 2ndly, that independently of the provisions of the Succession Act and the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, which were not applicable to the case, the executors of a Hindu do not, in the character merely of executors, take any estate, properly so called, in the property of the deceased. That accordingly on the death of R, the devisee for life in trust, there being no gift of the premises to the executors named in the will, the ownership in the premises would devolve upon the surviving heirs of the testator subject to the trust, and such heirs would accordingly be trustees under or by reason of the will of their ancestor, though succeeding to the property in their character of heirs. That the trusteeship thus vesting in all the surviving heirs, the release, though operative to pass the legal estate, so as to vest it in the plaintiff alone, could not vest the trusteeship in him alone, and that accordingly the plaintiff could not maintain this suit unless joined by the other heirs of B K. Held, 3rdly, that even if the other heirs of B K had joined as plaintiff, still the suit, being one by trustees to disaffirm the completed act of a predecessor against the person claiming by virtue of such act, would not lie. Semble—That as it appeared that the impersonations of Valabh never had availed themselves, and never were likely to avail themselves, of the house, the sale of it by R to the defendant was not a breach of trust. By the decree S's widow was declared entitled to the R10,000 given by the will with the benefit of a residence in the family dwelling-house, and participations in the means of worship. He then desired that all his property should be preserved and held for ever under the trusts, and for the purposes of the said will and settlement. In the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will, the testator went on to direct the "executors and trustees" to pay to his sons therein named a certain monthly sum, "such payment to be continued after his decease to his children and descendants per stirpes." After directing the executors and trustees to make other payments, etc., in the eighteenth clause he directed: "With respect to accumulations of money in the hands of the executors and trustees, I direct that the same be converted into such Government or other security as to the executors and trustees may seem best, and that the interest and produce of such security be accumulated and in like manner be invested, and that, when and so soon as the aggregate thereof shall amount to R3,00,000, it is to be transferred to, and divided among, my sons or the survivors, or survivor, together with the descendants of such of them as may be deceased, per stirpes; and as soon as new accumulations arise in the hands of the executors and trustees, that the same be again in like manner divided among my sons then living, or the survivor of their descendants, as before, and so on from time to time." In the twenty-first clause the testator made provision for the appointment of new "executors and trustees," "as it is my intent and desire that the disposition, the conditions, and control I am now devising in regard to the future arrangement and enjoyment of my property be perpetuated." In the Court below,—Held per MARKBY, J., that trusts cannot be created by Hindus, but a testator may burthen his heir or devisee with a payment of a simple sum of money to a specified person (including an idol) in existence at the death of the testator. Such bequest cannot be held good as a trust created for the benefit of the legatee, but may be treated as creating an ordinary obligation for the payment of money. On appeal,—Held per PEACOCK, C.J., that trusts have been and can be enforced against Hindus; the trustees in this case take upon such trusts as are valid; so far as they are invalid, the heirs are entitled to the beneficial interest. A Hindu cannot by his will do indirectly by intervention of trusts what he cannot do directly. Per MACPHERSON, J.—Both by Hindu law and the practice which has always prevailed in the Courts in India and in the Privy Council, a Hindu may legally deal with his property so as to create a trust or relation in many respects similar to, although not necessarily identical with, that known in English law as the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. Even if trusts are not expressly recognized by the old Hindu law, there is nothing in it forbidding them, or repugnant to them, or inconsistent with their existence. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the general scheme of the will failed, because the trusts were intended for an illegal purpose, namely, for the purpose of creating a perpetuity. Per PEACOCK, C.J.—The eighteenth clause is repugnant and void, also bad, because the persons to take were unborn at the time of the testator's death, and on the ground of uncertainty, it being impossible to ascertain at the testator's death who would be entitled to participate in the several divisions of accumulation directed to be made. As to the bequests in the second, third, and fourth clauses of the will,—Held in the Court below per MARKBY, J., that they could only operate in favour of specified persons in existence at the death of the testator. On appeal,—Held per PEACOCK, C.J., that they operated as "gifts to the sons for life, with remainders to such children of the sons as were in existence at the time of the death of the testator per stirpes." Per MACPHERSON, J.—There was a good gift in remainder to the children of such sons as were alive at the time of

He also charged the executors with waste and asked for an account. Held, both in the Court below and on appeal, that the devises were not void, merely upon the ground that the estates were devised upon trust, and that the testator had power to create by means of a devise to trustees such estates and beneficial interest as he could have created without the intervention of trustees. But the entails intended to be created by the will were void, estates-tail being wholly opposed to the general principles of Hindu law. The plaintiff could not claim maintenance, sufficient provision having been previously made for him by his father. Held in the Court below that, although the testator could not create an estate-tail, yet as it is clear that he intended to dispose of the whole inheritance, the devise must be construed as amounting to the creation of several successive life-interests, each commencing on the termination or the failure of the preceding, the whole completed by the gift of the entire estate of inheritance to take effect on the expiration of the last life-interest. The first series of such devises is not bad for remoteness, for there is nothing in Hindu law to prevent a testator from making a gift of property to an unborn person, provided the gift is limited to take effect, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being; therefore, as concerns only the succession of gifts for life only to J M and his sons, terminated by the absolute gift of the inheritance to an unborn person, the will is unimpeachable, because each of these gifts must take effect, if at all, at or before the close of a life in being; and the like conclusion would hold with regard to each of the other series of devises taken alone; but taken in the aggregate they may violate the rule against perpetuities; but the first series could not be affected by this, and therefore, as long as it stands, the plaintiff has no claim to a decision of the Court upon the validity of a devise which is subsequent in order of time. The plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. He is not entitled to immediate relief of any kind. Held on appeal that the devise to J M was valid, though it created only a life-estate. The intention of the testator was that J M should take an immediate vested beneficial interest in the real estate, subject to the charges for payment of legacies, annuities, etc., and in the R2,500 a month. The devise to J M was not bad for uncertainty. But the devises of estates-tail must be rejected as void, and cannot be converted by the Court into devises creating larger estates than the testator intended. The words of the devise cannot be construed to pass a general and absolute estate. As J M had no sons born in the lifetime of the testator, the devise to the use of the first and other sons successively of the eldest son of J M lapsed. By Hindu law a gift cannot operate to pass property unless the donee is in existence, so that, as soon as the property is relinquished and passes out of the donor, it may vest in the donee. That in the case of a will would be at the time of the death of the testator, from which moment the will operates as a relinquishment (except in the case of a posthumous child of the testator or a son adopted by the widow of a testator). Therefore the devises to the sons of J M to be born or adopted after the death of the testator are not valid according to Hindu law. The gift to trustees does not cure the invalidity, for the law will not permit that to be done indirectly which cannot be lawfully done directly. The gift of the personalty fails because of the want of certainty at the time of the death of the testator, who would be the donee, and whether the donee was a person in existence or not. The gift over of the corpus of the personalty after the payment of the legacies and annuities was bad, and consequently the property in it is vested in the son and heir of the testator subsequently to the trusts for the payment of debts, legacies, and annuities, etc. But the right to receive the surplus rents and profits of the real estate and of the interest and dividends of the personalty, if there be any, is vested in J M for life, or until the time arrives for the conveying of the real estates, and the vesting of the corpus of the personalty. The heir-at-law cannot be disinherited by words expressing that he is not to take any benefit under the will. He will take by descent, by his right of inheritance, whatever is not validly disposed of by the will. Subject to the trusts for payment of the funeral and testamentary expenses and of the debts, legacies, and annuities, the plaintiff, as the heir-at-law of the testator, is entitled (notwithstanding the will) to a general estate of inheritance in reversion to the immoveable property of the testator, and by the terms of the will no estate, larger than an estate for life, has been validly created, and there is a resulting trust in the plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff is not entitled to a declaratory decree against the unborn sons of J M, or the subsequent unborn devisees. The plaintiff is entitled to have the question of waste tried. He is also entitled to have an account of the moneys and securities which have come into the hands of the trustees, and to see how they have been applied. At the death of the testator, J had no male issue, and the bequest was therefore a bequest to a person or persons not in being and void Held also, regarding the subsequent creation of the power in favour of J as equivalent to a gift of the estate to him, that such gift was valid, although the prior gift was void It was a gift to him if he should have no male issue, a gift which, as he was alive at the death of the testator, was good under Hindu law It was not a gift over to him on an indefinite failure of his male issue. It came into force immediately on the death of the surviving tenant for life if at that time he should have had no male issue alive between the death of the testator and the latter event If a son had been born to him after the testator's death, the gift to him could not have come into operation It was only in the event of no son being born to him that he could take It would not therefore make any difference that the testator made an ineffectual and inoperative disposition in favour of such son if born The rule of the Tagore case, that the gift of an estate to take effect after the failure of previously created invalid estates is void, did not apply Held, further, that the power of appointment given by M P's will operated to confer ownership upon J after the death of B upon

131. ——— Remoteness—Applicability of English rules to Hindu wills.—A Hindu testator died in 1837, leaving four sons and two grandsons by a deceased son. By his will, dated in 1837, after directing that his property should be divided into five shares, of which his four sons were to take one each, and his two grandsons the remaining one, the testator made the following devise: "On the death of any or either of my said four sons, or of the said R D and M D (his grandsons) leaving lawful male issue, such male issue shall succeed to the capital or principal of the share, or respective shares, of his or their deceased father or fathers, to be paid or transferred to them respectively on attaining the full age of 21 years; but if any or either of my said four sons shall die without leaving any male issue, or if he or they shall die leaving such male issue, and the whole of such issue shall afterwards die under the age of 21 years, and without male issue, in such case the share or shares of my said sons so dying shall go to and belong to the survivors of my said sons and my said two grandsons for life and their respective male issue absolutely after their deaths in the same manner and proportion as is hereinbefore described respecting their original shares." U, one of the sons, died in 1853, leaving an only son S, born in the lifetime of the testator, who died shortly after his father intestate, and without male issue. In a suit by the widow of S claiming as his heir and representative to recover the share of U as having descended to S absolutely, and to obtain partition,—Held that, inasmuch as U survived the testator, the gift to the male issue of the testator's sons was void for remoteness as including objects who might have come into existence after the testator's death, and therefore be incapable of taking. The rule that where there is a gift to a class, and some persons constituting that class cannot take in consequence of remoteness, the whole bequest must fail, as well as the principle of the English Courts in deciding questions of remoteness, that regard is to be had to possible and not to actual events, is applicable to the interpretation of the wills of Hindus. The gift to the male issue being void, the subsequent limitations were also void. S therefore, and through him the plaintiff, was entitled to a share in such part of the testator's estate as by reason of the invalidity of the gifts in his will was undisposed of. By his will P left the residue of his property to trustees, who were to invest it in Government promissory notes and to pay the interest thereof to the wife of his son M and after her death to pay it to M. He further directed that after M's death "the amount of the interest is to be paid from time to time to his sons or daughters who may be alive according to what may be considered proper." By a subsequent clause he directed that, if there should be no one living of his son M's race or descent, the said Government notes should be given to a certain charitable fund. At the time of the testator's death the wife and one daughter (C) of M were living. Subsequently a son was born to M, but this child died shortly after its birth. The wife of M died in September 1889, and M himself died in October 1889. The plaintiff then filed this suit claiming the property in question as heir of the testator to the exclusion of C, the daughter of M. He contended that she could only claim as one of the class of "sons or daughters" of M mentioned in the will; that the gift to this class was void, as it included, or might include, persons who were not in existence at the time of the testator's death. Held that C was entitled to the property under the will. The primary intention of the testator was that all the members of the class specified should take and his secondary intention was that, if all could not take, those who could should do so. Here there was one member of the class who could take the property, and it might be inferred that the testator meant that she should take it, rather than that his intention should be defeated altogether. his executing his will, and that the bequests given by his will to his daughters, the defendants, were valid bequests. Held on appeal that the devise in M P's will in favour of the male issue of J meant in favour of such male issue as should be living at the time of the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, whether born in the lifetime of the testator or after his death; and as, at the death of the testator, J had no male issue, it was a gift to a person or persons not in being at that time, and therefore void under the rule in the Tagore case. Held also that the devise over, in default of such male issue, was an alternative gift to take effect on an event to be determined at the death of the survivor of the tenant for life, and consequently was not open to objection. Held further—as to the bequest to such person or persons as J should, by deed or writing, appoint—that there was no clear principle of Hindu law which forbade such a bequest being construed, and effect given to it, according to its plain and literal terms; always subject, however, to the same restrictions as the Hindu testamentary law imposes on the testator himself, viz., that the appointment should be made, so that (i) the appointee might be ascertained when the event arose on which he was to take (in this case, therefore, before the death of the surviving tenants for life), and (ii) the appointee be a person who was alive at the death of the testator. Held, accordingly, that in making this bequest the testator's intention was clearly to give J the ultimate disposal of the property, but not that it should form part of J's estate. The circumstance that English Courts, in such cases, treat the property, when the power has been exercised, as part of the estate of the appointor in the interest of creditors, and some other persons favoured by the Court of equity, could not affect the question as to what was the intention of M P when he made his will. Original Court's decree varied accordingly; the share in the residue appointed by J to his daughter M (born after the testator's death) being declared to be part of M P's estate of which he died intestate, and to belong, therefore, to his (M P's) heir. 136. ——————— One member of such class in existence of date of gift—Will directing deed to be executed—Date of deed is date of gift.—A Hindu died in 1856 leaving a will whereby he directed his widow and executrix L to purchase an estate worth R20,000 for his grandson T, and that this estate should be conveyed to trustees, to be held by them in trust for T for his life or until his insolvency, and after his death for his son or other male heir. The executrix purchased the estate, but no trust deed was executed. T therefore brought a suit in 1871 to have the will carried out and a trust deed executed. T R (one of the plaintiffs in the present suit), who was T's uncle, was made a party to that and a consent decree was passed which ordered the executrix L and T R should execute a trust deed in accordance with the directions in the will. A deed was accordingly executed in 1876 whereby the property was conveyed to trustees on the trusts declared in the will. At the time of the testator's death, T had no sons, but at the date of the deed in 1876 he had one son C and in 1883 another son G (the defendant) was born to him. T died in 1890, C died childless in 1891. The plaintiffs, who were T R, the son, and T R's son, the grandson, of the testator, now claimed the property. They contended that, as neither of T's sons were in existence at the date of the testator's death, they could not take under his will or under the deed which was afterwards executed to carry out the will; that, although at the date of the deed in 1876 one of the sons (C) was in existence, nevertheless he could only claim as one of a class, and that class was not ascertained or ascertainable at the date of the testator's death, nor at the date of the deed, G not having been born until 1883. The whole class was therefore excluded and the property after T's death was undisposed of. Held that, in view of the direction of the will that a deed was to be executed which should declare the trusts of the property, it was the date of the deed subsequently executed which should be regarded in order to determine the validity of the limitations of the property bequeathed, and not the date of the testator's death, and that, under the deed, on the death of T, his son C became entitled to the property. In the case of a gift to a class if there is a person in existence at the time of the gift capable of taking and whom undoubtedly the donor intends to benefit, he is entitled to take, although others of the same class subsequently come into existence whom the donor meant the gift also to benefit, but who cannot take because of their non-existence at the date of the gift. 137. ——————— Bequest to "children"—Meaning of the expression "children"—Gift to a class—Gift of income as required with trust for accumulation of balance.—Considerations which only show that a testator has made a disposition in his will which the Court is surprised to find there, though they might have determined the sense in which the testator had used an ambiguous expression, cannot of themselves lead the Court to refuse to give effect to the plain language he has employed, e.g., to read a bequest to "children" as a bequest to "sons" only. A bequest to "the children of R living at his decease," where some such children are in existence at the date of the will, need not be construed as a gift to a class of which some members might come into existence after the testator's death, when such a construction would manifestly defeat the primary object of the testator. A direction in a will to trustees to pay to a Hindu lady so much of certain dividends as she might from time to time require for her own use and support, etc., and to accumulate the surplus not required by her upon trusts, entitles the legatee to receive, if she requires it, the whole interest as it falls due, but not to claim afterwards amounts which she did not require as they fell due, and which have been accumulated, and this is so whether the

Held on appeal by the Privy Council, affirming this decision, that the Hindu law does not allow such a disposition of property as would have been made by a testator whose intention was to give to his descendants the profits only of his estate for their benefit, and for the maintenance of religious services, but not to dispose of the estate itself. Held that, according to the true construction of the will taken altogether, the testator's intention was not to pass the estate. This was confirmed by the clauses against alienation, and for the accumulation, as long as the family should remain joint, of a certain share of the profits; another portion being assigned for the religious services. This was not a case in which a testator, having expressed an intention that his estate should pass, had added a clause against alienation, in which case the latter clause would have been merely void. Held, accordingly, that this bequest was invalid. An account of the profits of the estate, from the date of the death of the testator, having been ordered by the decree of the Court below in favour of the inheritor of a share at whose instance the bequest was held invalid,—Held that this did not mean that enquiry should be made into the different payments by the manager for the time being, or moneys taken out by the members of the family, but that it should be ascertained to what portion of the savings of the family, or of the accumulations made, such sharer would be entitled; and that this order was accordingly correct. (Similar trusts in favour of L and her children followed.) The residue of the income of the moveable estate was directed to be paid, by moieties to the widows, and on the death of each, her share was to be given to her issue in the same way as the other sums were directed to be paid to them respectively. Held that the recital as to the testator's desire to establish a perpetuity did not invalidate the subsequent trusts, so far as they were otherwise good according to law; that the trust for the repair of the house was valid during the lives of the two widows and the survivor of them; that the trust to allow the two widows and their families to occupy the family dwelling-house was a trust for the widows and no one else, empowering them with their families and any others whom they might choose to make members of their families to reside in the house; that the trust to allow the testator's children, and their heirs on death of the widow, to occupy the house, was void; that the wives were entitled to R5 monthly, and the children of each, during the lives of their respective mothers, to R95, equally; that the trusts to pay R100 monthly to the children of each of the widows, on their respective deaths for ever, was void; that the gift of the residue to the widows in moieties was valid for their respective lives, but the gift to their issue on their respective deaths invalid, and that the trust for the worship, subject to the other trusts, so far as they were valid, was good. The testator died in 1873, leaving only his daughters him surviving. Held that, the will being governed by the Hindu Wills Act, the bequest to the daughter's son was valid. The rule of construction laid down in the Tagore case, 9 B. L. R., 377, does not apply to wills of Hindus made since the passing of Act XXI of 1871. After all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the said pensions and property shall have ceased, the executor's power shall be annulled, and then my grandsons and my grandsons' heirs—that is to say, my great-grandsons—shall be able to divide the whole of the property and take their father's shares." He further directed that, for five years after his death, his family should remain joint, and allowed to his executors R400 for family expenses. Held that the will contained sufficiently direct words of present gift to the grandsons, and that the clause in which it was attempted to postpone the enjoyment in possession, and other clauses which directed accumulation, must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant. Held also that the fact that the estate was subject to partial trusts or charges did not postpone the vesting in possession; nor would it, even according to English law, let in grandsons of the testator born after his death during the continuance of the trusts. *Alangamonjori Dabee v. In the seventh clause he directed as follows "After deducting expenses . money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife and my daughter M, and for the children of my daughter M after her death agreeably to the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of this will, and after paying the same, whatever income may remain is to be paid for the purposes of my wife and my daughter M and her children in such manner as my trustees may think proper" The eighth clause directed that, if M should have children, the trust should stand valid during the lifetime, and the trust property should then be apportioned amongst the heirs It then proceeded "But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter M, then after the death of M and my wife this trust is to become void, and the property delivered to such persons as my daughter M may direct it to be delivered by making her will." Held (1) that the direction in the seventh clause amounted to a gift of the residue for the use of the testator's wife and M, that his wife and M were, under the clause, entitled to the income of the fund in equal shares during their joint lives, and that the survivor would take the whole for her lifetime (2) That M having no children at the date of the testator's death, the provision for her future children was void under the ruling in the *Tagore case, 9 B L R, 377 , L R, I A, Sup. showing an intention on the testator's part that the enjoyment of the bequest should be of limited duration within the meaning of s. 160 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). To constitute a gift by implication in a will, there must be a reasonable degree of certainty as to the persons intended to take and the nature of the estates which they are intended to take. A direction that until the son or sons of the tenant for life of immoveable property should attain a certain age, no person on behalf of such son or sons should ask the tenant for life for an account or raise any objection, does not sufficiently define the persons to take, or the estates in which they are to take, constitute a gift by implication. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for a Hindu to create by express terms the estates which arise by virtue of the doctrine of Hindu law in regard to the rights of male issue in ancestral property; and even where the hypothesis that the testator intended (under a misapprehension of the law) to create such estates affords a key to the will and gives an adequate explanation of the various estates which would have to be implied in order to give full effect to the different directions contained in the will, yet if the estates cannot be implied from the words used in the will, the Court cannot create such estates for the testator by implication, since to do so would be to construct a will for him based upon his supposed intention, not on the words which he has used. (l) BEQUEST EXCLUDING LEGAL COURSE OF INHERITANCE.

151. ———————— Gift ineffectual so far as it departs from the law of inheritance—Gift over of accrued share.—A testator gave by his will to three sons of his brother certain estates "for payment of the expenses of their pious acts." He also directed as follows: "The said three nephews shall hold possession of the above in equal shares, and shall pay the Government revenue of the same into the Collectorate. They shall have no right to alienate the same by gift or sale, but they, their sons, grandsons, and their descendants in the male line shall enjoy the same, and shall perform acts of piety as they respectively shall think fit for the spiritual welfare of our ancestors. If any die without leaving a male child, which God forbid, then his share shall devolve on the surviving nephews, and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs." In a suit between the survivor of the three nephews and the testator's heir,—Held by the High Court a gift by will upon condition that the subject-matter should descend to heirs male only is void by Hindu law. Held also that the gift was bad in so far as it restricted the subject-matter of the gift to male descendants, but that the language used relating to the gift over to the testator's surviving nephew or nephews was not inconsistent with the intention of the testator that the whole augmented share should pass to the plaintiff, the sole surviving nephew; but that, having regard to the doctrine frequently acted upon by the Courts of India, he was only entitled to a life-estate therein. SHOSHI SHIKHURESSUR ROY v. TAROKESSUR ROY . I. L. R., 6 Calc., 421

Held on appeal by the Privy Council that a gift by will, attempting to exclude the legal course of inheritance, is only effectual, in favour of such person as can take, to the extent to which the will is consistent with the Hindu law; and it is a distinct departure from that law to restrict the order of succession to males excluding females; that the attempt to alter the legal course of inheritance failed, and that the estate taken under the above clause was only for life. The gift over of a life-estate was competent; it being to persons alive, and capable of taking on the death of the testator, and to take effect on the death of a person or persons then alive. On the death of one brother, his share went to the two other brothers, and on the death of one of the latter his augmented share, made up of his original and accrued share, went to the survivor. 152. ———————— Restrictions on bequest—Restrictions upon estate bequeathed, Effect of, if contrary to Hindu law—Restriction separable from valid dispositions.—In the will of a Hindu restrictions contrary to law made by the will upon valid dispositions, if they are separable from the latter, need not be held to invalidate them. Three documents, of which the second and third were executed by a testator after intervals of some years, together formed his will, containing a bequest of estate to his sons. This was held valid by the High Court, although the testator in the later documents had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the estate contrary to law, and therefore inoperative; the principal of them being (a) prohibition of actual possession or alienation, by any son, of his share in the estate; and (b) direction that the whole estate should be managed in a common cutcherry, with religious trusts, the sons to get only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity. At the same time, the Court held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others getting, up to the time of his attaining majority, merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share. A gift over was that on the death of a son surviving sons should take his share proportionately to their own, and that, if any of the sons so taking should die leaving sons, such sons should receive their proportionate parts of the deceased son's share: the first part of this provision was held good, not being invalidated by the second, which, as constituting a gift to an indefinite class, would take effect. 24. ——— Driving over deaf man—Penal Code, s. 338—Negligence.—Defendant was convicted under s. 338 of the Penal Code of causing grievous hurt. The evidence showed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town, between the hours of 7 and 8 P.M.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace, and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark, and the carriage without lamps, but that the horse-keeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot-passengers; that the defendant's carriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man, and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held, upon a reference, that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed. ANONYMOUS . . . . . 6 Mad., Ap., 32

Previous to this, M had obtained possession of that estate, and two months before the receipt of the letter she had contracted a second marriage. No settlement was made upon the marriage, and since the marriage her second husband had had the management of the property. In execution of a decree against the husband, his right, title, and interest in and to a portion of the property were put up for sale, and purchased by the plaintiff. Since January 1875 she had lived separate from her husband, but the furniture remained in his house. In February 1875 her husband mortgaged the property to B, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent. In June 1875 one K C B, a creditor, obtained a decree against the husband and B, in execution of which he seized the furniture as the property of the husband, and it remained in Court subject to the seizure. In July 1875 the plaintiff instituted a suit in her own name in trover to recover the articles of furniture or their value from her husband, on the ground that they were her separate property, and in August 1875 she preferred a claim in her own name to the property under s. 88 of Act IX of 1850. It was found on the facts that the furniture was the property of the plaintiff. The husband and wife were persons subject to the provisions of the Succession Act, s. 4, and the Married Woman's Property Act, 1874. Held that, under s. 7 of the latter Act, the suit was maintainable against the husband. Held also that the judgment for the plaintiff in the suit, to recover the furniture or its value from the husband, could not, without satisfaction, have the effect of vesting the

The Administrator General had entered a caveat and appeared to oppose the application. The petition for probate was therefore ordered to be treated as a plaint, both parties to file a written statement, and the case was set down to be heard. At the hearing it appeared R D was illegitimate, and the issue for trial was whether the document was or was not her will. Held that the Administrator General would be entitled to letters of administration under s. 15, Act XXIV of 1867, and that it was not necessary to make the Government a party to the suit. Semble—The Administrator General would have been entitled to apply for letters of administration under s. 224 of Act X of 1865. 8. ———— Sale of mortgaged property—32 & 33 Vict., c. 71 (Bankruptcy Act, 1869)—Rules 78 to 81.—The insolvents filed their petition on 17th March 1873, and obtained their final discharge on 2nd September 1873. After their discharge, a creditor, to whom they had mortgaged certain, property, made an application for the sale of the mortgaged properties, and the petitioner prayed for an order for an account of what was due on the mortgage, and for a sale under the conduct of the Official Assignee; that he should be at liberty to bid and set off the amount of the purchase against the sum due to him; that if any other person became the purchaser, the proceeds should be paid to him in liquidation of his debt, and that, after crediting that amount, the applicant might rank as a creditor to the estate for any remaining balance. The Court ordered the sale to be made as prayed in the petition, the Official Assignee to reserve a price on the property, and duly advertise it for sale; if not sold by public auction, application should be made to the Court by the Official Assignee for leave to sell by private contract. 10. ———— Surplus after paying creditors in full—Interest on debts—Nature of debts on which interest is payable.—If the estate is more than sufficient to pay the creditors twenty shillings in the pound, the surplus is to be applied to the payment of interest on debts bearing interest by contract. The debts on which interest ought to be allowed to creditors out of a surplus remaining in the Official Assignee's hands, after payment of the scheduled amount of debts, are such only as bear interest by the contract of the parties, either express or implied; not upon judgments or any other debts with respect to which interest could only be recovered quâ damages. IN THE MATTER OF MACCLEAN

[1 Mad., 220 note

———— s. 42—Preferential claims—Costs—European assistants and native workmen of insolvent firm.—The application for payment under s. 42 of the Insolvent Act must be taken to imply consent to a dissolution of the contract of service by the filing of the petition. Claims, therefore, by servants of an insolvent firm only allowed up to date of insolvency, not to the end of the month. Claim of servant who had left insolvent's service before date of insolvency allowed, but only for so much as accrued due to him within the six months previous to insolvency. Sum agreed to be paid to an assistant as extra salary or remuneration for making up insolvent's statement to be laid before the creditors, disallowed. Costs of the applications allowed out of the estate. One claimant was manager of the insolvent's business at Simla on a salary of R350 per month, up to 11th April 1867, when one of the partners wrote to him, promising him commission to make his salary up to R500. During the six months previous to the insolvency he had received R3,100, being more than the salary claimed for six months. Claim disallowed. IN THE MATTER OF PARKE PITTAR & CO.

———— s. 44—Omission to claim dividend—Expunging names of creditors from schedule—Official Assignee a trustee for creditors admitted in schedule.—The applicant was a creditor of the insolvents, who filed their schedule in Bombay in July 1868. The schedule contained the names of twenty-six creditors, twenty of whom were residents in Karachi and six in Multan. The debts amounted, in the aggregate, to R51,819-13, and were all admitted, some of them being for trifling sums. The applicant was the largest creditor on the schedule, his debt amounting to R27,500. The insolvents obtained their personal discharge in March 1869. Since the date of the insolvency, one dividend had been declared, viz., a dividend of one per cent. in 1870. Only one creditor had applied for and received that dividend. On the 5th July 1886, the applicant for the first time applied for a dividend on his claim. He was then, after so long a time, unable to adduce any proof in his own possession in support of his claim, but was ultimately allowed by the Official Assignee to prove his claim from the insolvent's books. Having thus proved his claim against the estate, the applicant obtained a rule on the 5th October 1887, calling on the other creditors of the insolvents to show cause why they should not come in and prove their claims, or, in default, why their names should not be expunged from their insolvent's schedule. Held, discharging the rule, that the Court had no power to expunge the name of a

5. ——————— and s. 51—Conduct of insolvent amounting to offences within ss. 50, 51—Conduct of insolvent considered with reference to the following charges filed against him by opposing creditors, viz., reckless speculation; contracting debts without reasonable expectation of paying them; misconduct in contracting debts; concealment of property; obtaining forbearance by false representations; contracting debts by false pretences; undue preference.—The insolvent had for many years carried on business in Bombay as a merchant. His firm (Messrs. B. and A. Hormarji) had been established in 1830 by his uncle and father. On the death of the latter in 1882, the insolvent was left the sole surviving partner, and from that time until his failure he carried on the business alone. The failure took place in April 1891, and on the 1st May 1891 he was adjudicated an insolvent. His liabilities were stated to be R47,98,591; his good assets R5,13,903, and his doubtful assets R60,014. His discharge was opposed by six Banks in Bombay with which he had had dealings. The grounds of opposition were as follows:—(1) Reckless speculation; (2) contracting debts without any reasonable expectation, at the time when the same were contracted, of paying the same; (3) gross misconduct in contracting debts; (4) concealment of property; (5) obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them; (6) contracting debts by means of false pretences; (7) fraudulently and with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors or of giving an undue preference to creditors, having discharged a debt due by the insolvent. It appeared that down to the end of 1889 there was nothing in the dealings of the firm to which objection could be taken. In the first half of the year 1890 the insolvent must have sustained heavy loss, as his mercantile assets over liabilities, which on the 31st December 1889 were R5,50,794, were on the 30th June 1890 reduced to R2,29,612. The charges, however, against the insolvent were based upon his conduct subsequently to the latter date. On that day (30th June 1890) the insolvent nominally possessed four lakhs of rupees, the saleable value of which was about $2\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs. With his finances in this state the insolvent speculated in exchange, and in six months (viz., before the 31st December 1890) he had lost his four lakhs of nominal capital, and 19 or 23 lakhs of rupees besides. The Court held (1) as to the first ground of opposition that the insolvent was guilty of rash and reckless speculation. This, however, was not an offence within the meaning of s. 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict., c. 21). When the insolvent entered into the contracts which had resulted in the loss, he had a fair capital, and though his speculations were excessive in amount, he had a fairly reasonable expectation that there would not be such a fall in exchange as would more than absorb his assets. (2) As to the second and third grounds of opposition, that they were proved in respect of the insolvent's transactions subsequently to December 1890, and that the insolvent was guilty of gross misconduct in contracting debts, having no reasonable or probable expectation, at the time when they were contracted, of paying them, and that his conduct fell within the purview of s. 51 of the Insolvent Act. In December 1890 the insolvent was bankrupt to the extent (at all events) of over 16 lakhs, and had on hand large forward contracts which then showed a further probable loss. In that position he entered into further large speculative sales of exchange. He had then no assets with which to meet any loss. (3) As to the fourth ground of opposition, that it was proved. (4) As to the fifth ground of opposition, that it was not established. On the 18th April 1891 the insolvent called a meeting of creditors and laid a not very candid or truthful statement of his affairs before them. Nothing was then arranged, and the meeting was adjourned for a week, in order that a committee should examine the insolvent's position, etc. It was understood and arranged that in the meantime no steps should be taken against the insolvent, and that he should keep his affairs in statu quo. The insolvent, however, swore that he understood he was to make no large payments, but that he was to keep the firm going. During that week the insolvent paid R3,193 due on a bill to one of the Banks and R472 on re-draft account, a few insignificant current expenses and R1,000 to his solicitors, who were preparing a trust-deed to be carried before the creditors. The Court was of opinion that the conduct of the insolvent in making these payments did not amount to the offence charged in the fifth ground of opposition, viz., obtaining forbearance from the opposing creditors by making false representations to them. (5) As to the sixth ground, that it was not established. On the 14th March the insolvent, in answer to enquiries, had assured the manager of the Chartered Bank that his firm was quite sound and solvent, it being then to his knowledge hopelessly insolvent On that day the manager accepted the insolvent's bills for £20,000 for which security was given, and subsequently the insolvent sold one of his own bills for £10 000 to the Bank This however, was in pursuance of a previous contract The evidence of the manager showed that it was because of this contract, and not because of the false representation of the insolvent, that he purchased the draft for £10 000 The Court was of opinion that the transaction did not come within s 50 (6) As to the seventh ground (undue preference), that it was not proved On the 16th April 1891, the day but insolvent which he was bound to take up, but the earliest did not fall due until the 20th May 1891 His practice had been to remit money a day or two before bills became due The Court was of opinion that the transaction was not an undue preference within s 50 It was no doubt, a voluntary payment but it was not shown to be a fraudulent discharge of a debt within the section A mere voluntary payment of a debt is not within the purview of the section Such a payment, must be fraudulent and must be made with the intent of diminishing the sum to be divided amongst creditors or of giving an undue preference to any of the creditors From the mere fact of a voluntary payment, fraud of a penal nature cannot be inferred Here nothing more was proved than a voluntary payment by a man in insolvent circumstances The insolvent knew he was in difficulties, but was of so sanguine a nature that he believed he could surmount them, and so R5 000 were sent rather with a view to keep up his English connection than with the fraudulent intent of giving an undue preference Where an undue preference is made penal, the Court must be satisfied that the guilty intention necessary to constitute the offence existed in the mind of the insolvent, and ought not to assume it unless the circumstances point to no other probable conclusion The release by an insolvent of a debt due to him without receiving payment would undoubtedly fall within the scope of s 50 of the Insolvent Act IN THE MATTER OF HORMARJI ARDESIR HORMARJI . . . When he had completed the term of his imprisonment, he left Bombay, and went to Morar and ultimately settled at Aligarh in the North-West Provinces. In August 1886, the Official Assignee was informed that the insolvent was possessed of landed property at Aligarh, and also considerable moveable property. On the 25th August 1886, the Official Assignee obtained a rule nisi calling on the insolvent to show cause why he should not hand over all this property to the Official Assignee for the payment of creditors. On the 10th August 1887, an order was made by the Insolvent Court under s. 58 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 & 12 Vict., c. 21) directing the insolvent to appear before the Court on the 21st September 1887, to be examined touching his estate and effects and dealings and transactions. 4. ——— Discovery—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 129, 136—Discovery of documents—Pardanashin women.—In a suit brought by two Mahommedan parda-nashin ladies for recovery of immoveable property by right of inheritance, an order was passed, under s. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, requiring the plaintiffs to declare by affidavit "all the papers connected with the points at issue in the case which were or had been in their possession or control." After some ineffectual proceedings, the plaintiffs were peremptorily ordered to file their affidavit on a certain date. On that date an affidavit was filed on their behalf by their brother and mooktear, with a list of their documentary evidence, but the affidavit and list were considered defective upon several grounds, one of which was that the affidavit ought to have been made by the plaintiffs personally. Further time was then given to the plaintiffs to amend these defects, and ultimately they filed an affidavit purporting to be made by them personally, praying that the Court would have it verified in any manner thought proper, provided that their parda-nashini were not interfered with. The Court, under s. 136 of the Code, dismissed the suit for want of prosecution, in consequence of the orders under s. 129 not having been complied with, though ample opportunity had been given to the plaintiffs, and no sufficient ground for non-compliance had been shown. Held, without going into the question

It should be a rule of practice that when an order is made under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) by the Judge in chambers, the suit should be set down for the trial of the particular issue as well as of the cause itself when it comes to a hearing before the same Judge. The fact that some of the plaintiffs reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit. Documents which contain the purport of interviews with, and of advice received from, the plaintiffs' solicitors and counsel as to the plaintiffs' position in regard to their said claim and as to the steps to be taken thereto, are privileged. Documents which record the steps taken by the plaintiffs from time to time in prosecuting their claim against the defendant are not privileged. 19. - - - - - Co-defendants—Inspection granted to defendant against co-defendant.—A defendant may obtain discovery or inspection as against a co-defendant if the latter can be regarded as an opposite party. The plaintiff sued to set aside a mortgage made by his uncle (defendant No. 3) to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, alleging that, shortly after he (the plaintiff) had attained his majority, he had been induced to join in the mortgage by the undue influence and threats of his uncle (defendant No. 3), who represented that the money to be raised by the mortgage was required to pay off the debts of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff further alleged that he had received none of the money, and that no money had been paid by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the third defendant in his presence. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took out a summons against the third defendant for inspection of certain account books and documents. It was objected that no question was raised in the suit between the third defendant and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and that consequently, under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the latter were not entitled to inspection. Held that inspection must be given. It was possible that, not being able to set aside the mortgage as regarded himself, the third defendant was colluding with the plaintiff. Under the circumstances, he might be considered a "party opposite" to the first two defendants, although eventually the Court might not be able to make any order between him and them. R., 1 C. P. D., 471,* referred to. Where, however, the party comes into Court relying on the original affidavit as sufficient to support his claim of privilege, but asks the Court, if it should think otherwise, for leave to put in a further affidavit in support of his claim, quære whether he should be allowed to do so. In a suit brought in January 1884 to recover money for work done and materials supplied in the erection of certain mills for the defendants, in which the defence was that the quality of the work was inferior to that contracted for, and the defendants stated in their written statement that, "in consequence of the information which they had received with regard to the quality of the work done by the plaintiffs, they caused the same to be inspected by two independent engineers in the month of July 1893, and they at once discovered such extensive defects therein that the costs of making good such defects will far exceed any possible sum due to the plaintiffs,"—Held that the defendants could not set up a claim of privilege for the reports of the two engineers. Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia, L. R., 2 Ch. D., 644, referred to. Where a party expressly refers to documents in the pleadings as the source of his own information and knowledge of facts relevant to the suit and then sets up those facts by way of answer to the plaintiff's claim, he cannot afterwards attempt to make the case that the documents are confidential, and intended merely for his legal advisers, or for the purpose only of evidence in the case. inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search-warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials; that it was bad on the face of it, as it did not "specify clearly," as directed in Form VIII, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code, whose khatta books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of documents by the prosecution in a criminal case. Held per NORRIS, J., that, assuming the contention as to the search-warrant arose on the rule as granted, the warrant must be looked at as a whole, and so looked at it sufficiently and clearly showed that it was the khatta books of A which were referred to as being essential to the inquiry and the objects of the directed search; nor was there anything to show that the warrant was issued otherwise than regularly and in due course. Per NORRIS, J.—Though the Courts in England have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases, on the ground that no man should be compelled to produce evidence to criminate himself, the Legislature in this country has authorized the production, and under certain circumstances the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search-warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, and it was never doubted that the latter may be used in evidence against him. If, as laid down in the case of Dillon v. O'Brien, 20 Irish L. R., 300, the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason, felony, or misdemeanor, rests "upon the interest which the State has in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect such property must exist, as well as a right to seize and detain it, and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, etc., found on a prisoner when arrested, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence. Per GHOSE, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search-warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but semble that the search-warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced on summons only; that although the warrant was not specific, still, inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indistinct, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed. Per GHOSE, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him. The Magistrate has to determine at the time when he makes an order under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or issues a search-warrant under s. 96, whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court, the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection, for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the case of a search or seizure by the police under Ch. XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecutor would necessarily have an opportunity of looking at the documents and articles seized, and there is no reason why he should not have the same opportunity or privilege where, under the order of the Court, any particular document or other thing is seized under a search-warrant and brought up to the Court. Bearing in mind the purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, etc., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them, and determine whether they should go in as evidence. Held per Curiam—for the reasons above given—that the Magistrate had power to allow the inspection, but such inspection must be limited to the books named in the search-warrant. This application was refused. 1. LIFE INSURANCE.

1. —— Assignment of policy—Death of assignee—Death of assured—Notice by assignee to company—Payment of premia by executors of assignee—Absence of legal personal representative of assured—Refusal to pay over.—A, having insured his life in a certain Life Insurance Company, assigned his rights under the policy to B, the assignment on the face of it expressing no consideration whatever. The fact of the assignment was notified to the company. B, after paying all premia due, died, appointing C and D his executors, who took out probate of his will, and paid all subsequent premia on the policy. A died, and C and D then demanded payment of the policy-money. The company, however, refused payment unless C and D first obtained the concurrence of the legal representative of A to the payment. Held that the company were justified in refusing to pay the money in the absence of the legal representative of A. 2. —— Age of assured—Proof of age—Onus of proof—Mistake in statement of age—Fraud.—A insured his life with the defendant company. By the terms of the policy the declaration of the assured as to his age was made the basis of the contract, and the policy was issued, subject to the express condition that, in case any statement contained in the declaration were untrue, the policy should be void. The assurance was also expressly made, subject to the regulations and conditions contained in the prospectus of the company. The prospectus contained the following provision with regard to the age of parties insured: "Age admitted in the company's policies in all cases where proof is given satisfactory to the directors. Proof of age can be furnished at any time; if not furnished, it will be necessary on settlement of claim;" and after stating the nature of the "evidence as to age," which the company would accept, the prospectus continued: "The directors recommend applicants to furnish any of the above as soon as possible and get the age admitted in the policy, as it is required by all soundly conducted companies on settlement of claim if not previously produced." A died, and his administrators claimed the amount of the policy. Held that the above condition contained in the prospectus, which must be read into the policy, imposed on the assured or his representatives the obligation of giving proof of age before the company could be called upon to pay. If the evidence had been given in the lifetime of the assured, and an admission of age was attached to the policy, no further proof would be needed, and the onus of disputing the age would be thrown on the company; but in the absence of such evidence and of such admission, it lay upon those claiming upon the policy by reasonable proof to satisfy the Court as to the age of the assured. The prospectus of the company contained a further provision that "policies held by parties on their own lives are indisputable on any ground whatever except fraud." Held that this provision did not relieve those claiming upon the policy from the burden of giving proof of age, but it covered a misstatement as to age as well as other misstatements, provided they were not fraudulent. It relieved the assured from the legal effect which an innocent misrepresentation as to age would otherwise have had under the strict terms of the contract. The result therefore was that the plaintiffs should give proof of the age of the assured, but, if such proof disclosed nothing more than an innocent mistake as to age on the part of the assured, the policy would not be vitiated. Subject to the above terms of the prospectus, any untruth in the declaration as to the age of the assured would vitiate the contract. The statement as to the age of the assured amounts to a warranty, and the warranty being broken, the risk under the policy would not attach. 3. —— Premiums on policy—Condition of prepayment of premium—Waiver—Sterling premiums—Case stated under Ch. XXXVIII, Code of Civil Procedure.—An insurance company, in order to carry out an agreement with the assured to convert a rupee policy into a policy of sterling value, made an endorsement of the conversion on his policy, it being stated that such conversion was in consideration of all future premiums being paid in sterling. The policy so endorsed was re-delivered to the assured without any demand for the prepayment of the first sterling premium. Subsequently, and before the first sterling premium became due, the assured died. Held that the prepayment of sterling premium as a condition precedent to the right to the sterling assurance had been waived, and that the representatives of the assured were entitled to payment of the full amount of the sterling policy. Canning v. *Farquhar, L. to prove that the loss did not fall within the exception. Held, secondly, that the meaning of the policy was that the ship was to be at liberty to proceed to or stay at any port she pleased, but that the insurers were not liable for any loss arising from perils of the sea in which the three following events were combined: first, that she was at the time touching or trading on the coast of Coromandel; secondly, that she was at the time within soundings; thirdly, that the loss happened between the 15th October and 15th December. Held, thirdly, upon the facts, the loss was within the policy, notwithstanding the exception. The bales and cases were separately enumerated and separately valued in the body of the policy, but the gross total was made up. Held that the words "free from particular average," following directly upon the gross total, must be taken to apply to the whole value of both lots, and not separately to the bales and separately to the cases. 9. ——————— Particular average loss—Liability of underwriters.—In a policy of insurance effected in Bombay upon goods shipped from Calcutta to Jeddah, two clauses were inserted in writing, the rest of the policy being in the ordinary English printed form. The first written clause was in English as follows: "Warranted free of particular average, unless stranded, sunk, or burnt." The second was written on the margin of the policy in the Gujarathi language, and was to the following effect: "Insurance upon the goods to be without damage. The loss arising from damage is to be on the head of the owner of the goods." Held the underwriters of such a policy are liable to the insurer for a particular average loss where the vessel in which the insured goods are shipped is stranded, sunk, or burnt. 10. ——————— Notice of claim by insured—Action brought before expiration of six months from date of notice—Constructive total loss—Meaning of the words "sunk," "stranded."—Where insurers on receiving notice of a claim made against them under a policy of insurance distinctly repudiate and deny that any claim exists against them or that the party serving such notice has any right to recover against them, there arises an immediate right to sue, and the insured is not bound to wait for the expiration of six months before taking proceedings to enforce his claim. Where it appeared upon evidence that goods on board a ship that was wrecked on a voyage from Karachi to Bombay, although much damaged by sea-water, were nevertheless of such merchantable value as to make it worth while to send them on to their port of destination,—Held, in an action against the insurers of the goods, that no claim for constructive total loss was maintainable. In an action upon a policy of marine insurance the evidence given with respect to the loss of the ship was as follows: "The vessel grounded near Dwarka. After the vessel struck, the water constantly broke right over all. . . . The cargo was all under water. The labourers were only able to work at ebb tide, and at high tide they could only see the top of the vessel's masts. . . . The vessel lay where she stranded seven days, and was then raised with casks." Some of the goods on board were insured by a policy which contained the clause "warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." It was contended for the plaintiffs that the ship had "sunk," and that the damage to the goods was therefore covered by the policy. Held that where a vessel runs aground and lists over, and is in consequence covered by the high tide, which causes damage to goods on board, it cannot be said that she has "sunk" within the meaning of the word as used in a policy of insurance, and therefore that a claim for particular average cannot be sustained under a clause in the policy—"warranted free of particular average, unless sunk or burnt." 11. ——————— Insurable interest—"Interest or no interest," effect of these words in a policy—Stat. 19 Geo. II, c. 37—Loan on "avung"—Insurance effected after loss of subject-matter of insurance—Meaning and effect of the words "lost or not lost" in a policy.—Policies of insurance between natives of India (those, at least, which do not contain the words "interest or no interest") are to be construed in the same way as such instruments have been uniformly construed by the general law merchant in Western Europe, viz., as contracts of indemnity. A certain trade is carried on between native merchants in Western India with the costs of Africa and Madagascar by means of native vessels which leave the Indian ports early in the year, and after remaining in the ports of Africa and Madagascar for four or five months, leave on the return voyage about August or September. This trade consists in shipping goods at the Indian ports, to be disposed of at the African and Madagascar ports, and purchasing with the proceeds fresh goods to be similarly disposed of in the home ports. To enable traders to embark in this venture, it is their practice to borrow money of merchants on what is termed "avung," that is, money borrowed on the condition that it is not to be repaid except in case of the safe arrival of the goods in the home ports on the return voyage, in which event the loan becomes repayable with interest at a high rate. Held that, having regard to the long-established practice in the port of Bombay of insuring such risks, the interest of the lender of such a loan in the goods on board a ship on her return voyage to India is an insurable interest. Semble—That an avung loan does not give the lender a charge on the goods. Held that a policy of marine insurance on goods is not invalid by reason of its having been effected subsequently to the loss

22. ——— Constructive total loss.—In a suit on a policy of insurance as for a total loss, where goods were shipped for the voyage from Surat to Kurrachee, and the vessel having sprung a leak was forced to put into Dwarka, at which place the goods (with exception of some iron thrown overboard during the voyage) were landed and placed in a warehouse, from which a portion (some castor oil and jagari) was carried off by robbers; and the residue of the cargo, consisting principally of cotton seeds which were dried and cleaned, was sold; and the proceeds, after deducting freight expenses, remained in the hands of mahajans, to be paid to whomsoever might be entitled to them,—Held, first, that the loss by robbers, although not expressly mentioned in the policy, was one of the perils insured against; second, that the Judge below being erroneously of opinion that when the goods were once landed damaged there was nothing to do but to sell everything for the benefit of underwriters, and having consequently recorded no finding on the material question whether the whole or any part of the cargo was practicallly capable of being sent in a marketable state to the port of destination, the suit must be remanded, in order that the Judge might determine whether there was a constructive total loss which entitled the plaintiffs to abandon; and if not, that he might award such a proportion of the value of the iron and of the jagari and oil which were actually lost, and of the amount of the deterioration in the cotton seeds and other articles, as the sum insured by the defendant bore to the whole sum, taking into account also in that case what proportion the sum insured bore to the actual value of the goods. 24. ——— Notice of abandonment.—A cargo, consisting of railway sleepers, was insured by the plaintiffs in the ship Heimdhal from Geography Bay to Calcutta, and expressed in the policy to be warranted from all risks, except total loss. In proceeding up the river Hooghly, in charge of a pilot, on the 30th April, the vessel grounded on the Rungafulla Sand, heeled over, and lay imbedded in the sand. Endeavours were made unsuccessfully to get her off. On 5th May, Lloyd's surveyor inspected the vessel, and reported that, considering her position, the state of the tide at that season, and the expense of getting her off, it was unadvisable to go to further expense in doing so; and that the cost of repairs would, in all probability, amount to much more than the value of the ship when repaired. Some of the sleepers had been then jettisoned, and the surveyor recommended that the vessel and cargo should be abandoned and sold by public auction to the highest bidder. Attempts were made, but unsuccessfully, to get some of the cargo off, and the sleepers were of such a quality that they would not float. The consignees accordingly

A childless person, since deceased, expressed to the father of the minor son of his sister his intention to make the boy his heir, and that, if he, the intending donor, should have children of his own, he would give the boy a share of his property. The father assented and made over charge of the boy. The widows and mother of the deceased, taking his estate for their lives, admitted the boy to joint possession with them, and, on being sued by the reversioners of the family estate expectant upon their deaths, defended, as co-defendants with the boy, on the ground that they had, in obedience to the known wishes of the deceased, recognized the boy as heir to him. Held that the reversioners could only be deprived of the inheritance after the death of the widows, who could not transfer any estate to last beyond their own lives, by the act of the deceased in contracting with the father of the boy to make the boy the heir, if such contract had been made. And that the substantial question was whether the representations made between the two had amounted to a contract to that effect. On evidence wholly oral, it was found that no such contract had been made. Only enough had been said between the two to give rise to the expectation on either side that the boy would, the then intended course being followed, get the inheritance. There was no provision as to payment of interest after due date. The bond specified certain property as belonging to the obligors and contained the following provision: "Our rights and property in the aforesaid talukh Rajapur shall remain pledged and hypothecated for this debt." Interest was claimed in the suit at the rate of R1-8 per cent. per mensem as well for the period after as for the period before the due date of the bond. Held that, although cases might arise in which a jury or a Judge might refuse to give a plaintiff any interest, i.e., damages, post diem, at all, the circumstances would have to be of a very exceptional character as, for example, where the interest contracted to be paid before due date was exorbitant and extortionate. Cooke v. Fowler, L. R., 7 H. L., 27, referred to. Held that in determining the amount of damages the question whether the plaintiff has unnecessarily delayed bringing his suit, and so allowed his claim to mount up to a sum far in excess of the principal money originally advanced, may be taken into consideration as a reason for not making the original rate of interest the basis on which to assess such damages. Juala Prasad v. Khuman Singh, I. L. R., 2 All., 617, referred to. The principle upon which the obligee of the bond may recover interest after due date does not rest upon any implied contract by the obligor to pay such interest, but proceeds upon the breach of contract which has taken place by reason of the non-payment on due date, and the reasonable amount to which the obligee is entitled for such breach. A debt being presently due, an agreement to pay it by instalments, with a stipulation that on default the creditor may demand immediate payment of the whole balance due with interest is not to be relieved against inequity. Payments made by the debtor had been appropriated by the creditor to payment of the interest on the bond bearing simple interest, while the compound interest, on the other hand, had been left to accumulate. The creditor sued the representative of the debtor after his decease, to enforce the mortgage bearing compound interest. S. 80 governs alike the case in which interest, but no rate of interest, is mentioned in the instrument, and that in which interest is not mentioned. In a suit on the bond the obligee, the obligor having failed to pay any interest, claimed interest from the date the bond became due to the date of institution of the suit at R37-8-0, the defaulting rate. Held, following the principle laid down in Bansidhar v. *Bu Ali Khan, I. But a condition that, upon failure by the borrower to pay the interest when due, both compound interest and an increased rate shall be payable, amounts to a penalty, inasmuch as the two stipulations together cannot be regarded as a fair agreement with reference to the loss sustained by the lender. In a bond, dated in February 1877, for a sum of money payable in June 1882, it was provided that interest should be paid at the rate of R9 per cent. per annum on the puranmashi of every Jaith, and that, if the interest were not duly paid, the rate should be increased to R15 per cent. per annum, and compound

It was also found that although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. Kamini Sundari Chaodhrani v. *Kali Prosunno Ghose, I. 235. ———— Unconscionable bargain—Bond—Compound interest.—In a suit for the recovery of a principal sum of R99 due upon a bond, with compound interest at two per cent. per mensem, it was found that advantage was taken by the plaintiff of the fact that the defendant was being pressed in the tahsili for immediate payment of revenue due, to induce him to execute the bond charging compound interest at the above-mentioned rate, notwithstanding that ample security was given by mortgage of landed property. It was also found that although, under the terms of the bond, the plaintiff had power to enforce the same at any time by bringing to sale the mortgaged property, he had wilfully allowed the debt to remain unsatisfied, in order that compound interest at a high rate might accumulate. Held that the bargain was a hard and unconscionable one, which the Court had undoubted power to refuse to enforce, and which, under all the circumstances, it would be unreasonable and inequitable for a Court of justice to give full effect to; and that, under the circumstances, compound interest should not be allowed. Kamini Sundari Chaodhrani v. *Kali Prosunno Ghose, I. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held (1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (2) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. While the goods were in transit to Bombay, S, the consignor, ordered the plaintiffs to deliver them to his agent F, instead of to the consignee, and on the 18th May F requested delivery from the plaintiffs. Before the goods could be delivered, however, the firm of E D S & Co. (defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3) claimed them, alleging that they had been assigned to them by K for valuable consideration. The plaintiffs thereupon filed this suit, praying that the defendants should be required to interplead, and that they should be restrained from suing them (the plaintiffs) in respect of the said goods. The plaintiffs claimed to charge the goods with payment of freight, wharfage, and demurrage, and their costs of suit. Held (1) that the suit was properly instituted by the plaintiffs as an interpleader suit so as to entitle them to their costs; (2) that S, the fourth defendant, was entitled to the goods, subject to the plaintiffs' charge for freight and costs; (3) that the plaintiffs' charges for wharfage and demurrage could not be allowed. The goods remained in the plaintiffs' possession, not by reason of any neglect or default of the owner to take delivery of them, but by the act of the plaintiffs themselves, who kept and refused to deliver them for their own protection and benefit. All that they could presumably be entitled to was a reasonable warehouse rent, which, however, they had not claimed. BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY CO. v. SASSOON . . . I. L. In 1837, the entire zamindari was put up to sale for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by Government as the highest bidder, who thereupon granted a lease for a term of twenty years to W. This revenue sale was never set aside; but in 1842 the Government restored the estate to the Rajah zamindar with all the prior incumbrances, but subject to his confirming the lease to W. In 1844, the father of the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of their tenure, but the suit was dismissed by the Principal Sudder Ameen on the ground that the right to sue had not accrued, and could only arise on the expiration of the lease to W. This judgment was reversed by the Sudder

The contract of the adoptive mother and guardian was not personally binding upon the adopted son, and had not been ratified by him after attaining full age. It did not purport to deal with the estate to which he afterwards succeeded, but was entered into by the managers in their own names. Held that the case, as originally made in the plaint and raised by the issues framed in the Court of first instance, which covered a wider ground, viz., that the son was personally bound by the contract as being beneficial to him, and on the ground that he had ratified it after attaining full age, could not be altered in appeal into what would be a wholly different claim and raise entirely new issues, viz., that the managers, having power under the will, had charged the estate with the rent of the ijara, and that such charge remained upon it in the possession of the heir, who was liable to the extent of the assets received by him. Evidence in the latter suit was received in that of the appellant by consent of parties, both suits having been brought against the same defendant, whose title as widow of a son alleged to have been adopted by the last owner was set up in both, but was not proved. Appeals having been filed in both suits, in that brought by the sister's son a new issue was framed by the Appellate Court, under s. 566, Civil Procedure Code, as to whether he was entitled as nearest of kin, or was excluded by the other claimants, whose suit was, at that time, compromised. Held that after what had taken place in regard to both suits the Appellate Court could frame this issue, although it was new, and had not been raised by the defendant's written answer. With reference to the evidence in the one suit having been imported as a whole into the other at the first hearing, and the admission of evidence upon the trial of the new issue, it was held that the parties intended that the evidence should be admitted and that no irregularity had taken place materially affecting the decree of the High Court, which dismissed the suit of the sister's son on return made under s. 567. The lower Court raised the issue, whether the plaintiff was entitled to the right alleged by him, and the issue was accepted by the parties without any objection. That Court held that, albeit plaintiff was head or senior of the caste, he could not have any right in that character to any fees at weddings, and accordingly dismissed the suit. In appeal the District Judge found that, if any such right had ever existed in the plaintiff, it had been taken away by Act XIX of 1844; he was also of opinion that the plaintiff had not been invited to assist and did not assist at the marriage ceremony in question, and he affirmed the decree of the Court below. Held by the High Court, in reversal of the decrees of the lower Courts, that Act XIX of 1844 did not apply to the case, and that the District Judge was bound to decide the question really involved in the issue, viz., whether, invited or uninvited, plaintiff was entitled by custom to the fees claimed by him.
